Wings Over the Pacific 35,000 Feet Up in 7 Hours A Test for the League Must We Go In?

By Arthur Brisbane

SAN SIMEON, CAL., Jan. 16. —From one window on this ranch you see the Pacific ocean, curving downward toward mysterious Asia. From another window you see toward the east, rows of mountain ranges, stretching north and south, the heavy backbone of this continent.

Thin clouds almost cover the sky on the Pacific over toward the Asiatic coast, dark near the water, white with blue openings above. You wonder when a REAL air fleet of four or five thousand war planes will come through such a thin curtain of clouds, fly over those mountains, and on eastward to deal with United States cities, including the Capitol at Washington.

Everything is calm along our side of the Pacific. TOO CALM as regards any sort of defense. A fleet of hostile planes could come, finish their work, and it would all be over, before our "national defense system" could know anything about it.

That should interest someone in Washington.

How could any Asiatic power send a fleet over the Pacific, do you ask?

Less than twenty-five years ago, Lord Northcliffe offered $50,000 to anybody that would fly across the English Channel. That was thought "impossible." The other day Amelia Earhart, a young woman, alone, without sleep, with no pilot, flew over twenty-four hundred miles of the Pacific in eighteen hours.

And did you not notice the plan of the brilliant pilot, Wiley Post, who "expects soon to cross the Pacific, thirty-five thousand feet up, using an oxygen suit, and crossing in about seven hours," as he told Will Rogers?

Did you fail to notice that Russia has built a heavy plane that has flown seven thousand five hundred miles without refueling? That plane could cross the Pacific ocean in one hop.

What Russia, Wiley Post or Amelia Earhart can do, any Asiatic power could do, with highly-trained pilots relieving each other, getting plenty of sleep. A few planes might fall on the way, but that would make no difference in the final result.

The Saar plebiscite, as was certain in advance, proves to be superficially a victory for Hitler. In reality, it proves the devotion of Germans to Germany under any conditions.

With the population of the Saar more than ninety-five per cent German, voters were asked whether they wished once more to resume German citizenship, throw in their lot with France, or remain suspended in the air as wards of the League of Nations. It was certain that Germans would vote for Germany.

Fortunately, certain stipulations made by the League of Nations before the vote included one compelling Germany, if she won, to allow all minority residents in the Saar to have one year in which to move out of the country if they chose, free of all molestation, with the right to dispose of their property without taxation or other charges, and take the proceeds with them.

This is of utmost importance to the great number of Jews that migrated into the Saar district when Hitler rose to power.

Disquieting news comes from the Saar about Jewish shops closed in fear of violence, and threats of all kinds. What happens in the Saar, to Jews especially, now that the region once more becomes German, will be a test not only of German good faith following Hitler's promise to the League, but also and particularly a test of the League of Nations' strength and courage to act.

The duty of the League would be to re-enter the Saar and take possession following the molestation of any minority, or interference with minority rights.

Here you learn that there is a good chance of this country adding to other follies the extraordinary folly of taking a first step into the League of Nations, through the back door of the World Court.

Opposition to World Court membership is said to have dwindled down to twelve senators, and the United States is expected to put itself under World Court orders, soon.

Why should this country go three thousand miles across the ocean and submit matters of vital importance to judges representing countries that hate the United States because they have recently swindled the United States?

ROOSEVELT URGES OLD AGE INSURANCE

JOBLESS Aid in U. S. PLANS

SWIFT PASSAGE OF BILL ASKED

By Associated Press

Washington, Jan. 17 — A broad social program intended to secure America's 126,000,000 against hazards and vicissitudes of life was laid before Congress today by President Roosevelt.

Asking swift action of the overwhelmingly Democratic Senate and House, he recommended these four specific types of legislation:

"1. Unemployment compensation.

"2. Old age benefits, including compulsory and voluntary annuities.

"3. Federal aid to dependent children through grants to states for the support of existing mothers' pension systems and for services for the protection and care of homeless, neglected, dependent and crippled children.

"4. Additional Federal aid to state and local public health agencies and the strengthening of the Federal public health service."

The Cabinet committee report of 60,000 words and sponsored by Secretary of Labor Francis Perkins was drafted by Senator Robert F. Wagner (D.), New York.

In brief the Wagner bill provided these essentials:

Creation of an old age pension fund in the Treasury supplied by a compulsory tax on payrolls, half to be paid by the employer and half by the employe. The tax starts at 1 per cent January 1, 1937 and reaches 5 per cent January 1, 1957.

Eligible at 65

Eligible employes are those 65 years old, who are no longer gainfully employed and for whom taxes have been paid for at least 200 weeks over a five-year period, beginning before they are 60.

Pensions paid monthly, vary according to the monthly wage and length of tax payments. It is estimated the old age reserve eventually would be maintained at about $15,250,000,000.

For those now aged and without support, the government would appropriate $50,000,000 for the next fiscal year and $125,000,000 thereafter, to be matched by state and local payments for a maximum pension of $30 a month.

For voluntary old-age insurance, the government would be authorized to sell to citizens under 65 annuity certificates with maturity values ranging up to $5000.

Unemployment insurance essentials are:

Provisions of a tax on payrolls beginning January 1, 1936, and reaching three per cent by 1938 with employers receiving a 90 per cent credit on contributions they make to approved state unemployment insurance systems. The rate

Doctor Describes Fatal Skull Fracture

How Baby Lindbergh Died

By International News Service

Flemington, N. J., Jan. 17—Here is the testimony given today by Dr. Charles H. Mitchell, Mercer county medical examiner, who performed the autopsy on the Lindbergh baby.

He was asked by Attorney-General Wilentz if he could give an opinion "as to the relation of the fracture to the kind of death in this case."

"I should say death was either instantaneous or else occurred within a few minutes after the fracture was inflicted," replied the doctor.

"There was a blood clot on the brain which indicated the child was not dead when its skull was fractured. That fracture was inflicted on the living child. It bled. The fracture was so great death was practically instantaneous.

"There is absolutely no question but what the child died from a fractured skull."

"Was it an extensive fracture?"

"Very extensive. It ran about 1½ inches posterior to the left ear, forward three or four inches, upward and around the back of the head."

Flemington, N. J., Jan. 17—Medical Examiner Charles H. Mitchell testified today at the murder trial of Bruno Richard Hauptmann that the Lindbergh baby was killed by a "fractured skull." He had conducted the autopsy.

Dr. Mitchell said he had practiced medicine almost 35 years and had performed "probably 1000 autopsies." The doctor was asked what he saw when he examined the remains of the child as "to its recognizability." He replied:

"The face was quite good. The facial muscles had not deteriorated."

Dr. Mitchell said he had a photograph of the Lindbergh baby, who had been missing 72 days at the time the baby was found, and he was "very much impressed that it was the same child."

Asked what, in his opinion, the baby died of, Dr. Mitchell said:

"There is absolutely no question but what the child died from a fractured skull."

"Was it an extensive fracture?"

"Very extensive. It ran about 1½ inches posterior to the left ear, forward three or four inches, upward and around the back of the head."

When Dr. Mitchell was asked if he could give an opinion as to the time of death relating to the fracture, Defense Attorney Frederick A. Pope objected, saying there was no evidence that "any other means were taken to try to discover the cause of death."

"At most, it can't be more than a guess," declared Pope.

Pope was over-ruled and Dr. Mitchell answered the question. He said:

Blood Clotted on Skull

"I would say death in this case was caused instantly or within a few minutes after the fracture occurred."

The doctor continued:

"That fracture occurred on a living child. The blood was clotted there. The blow was struck or the damage was done while the child lived and breathed."

Dr. Mitchell, portly, double-chinned physician, came to the stand to testify to his autopsy.

He told the Attorney-General the

O'Casey Play Ban Stays, Foes Heard by Mayor

So far as Boston is concerned, "Within the Gates" is definitely without the portals of Boston's hospitality.

A decision not to try to put the play of the Irish playwright, Sean O'Casey, on the boards of the Shubert theater here was reached following a special meeting in the mayor's office of the Boston Board of Censorship.

At this meeting Mayor Mansfield announced his uncompromising opposition to the play. The mayor had not seen the play but had read the book.

He said:

"It is nothing but a dirty book, full of commonplace dirt."

Chief Justice Wilfred Bolster, a member of the board, argued that the board had no jurisdiction over a play that has not yet been put on the boards here.

Police Commissioner Joseph J. Leonard, the third member of the board, declared that he agreed with the mayor that the curtain should not go up on the play in a Boston theater.

Chief opposition to the production at the hearing, held at the request of representatives of the Shubert theater, came from Rev. Terrence L. Connolly, S. J., professor of Irish drama at Boston College, and Rev. Russell M. Sullivan, S. J., head of the Boston Legion of Decency.

'Only Good Words'

The only good words that were spoken in favor of it, according to the mayor, came from "people in Cambridge and Milton," and he demanded:

"What right have they to tell us what we should do in Boston? Let them produce the play in Cambridge or Milton."

Mayor Mansfield quoted a letter from Bishop Henry Knox Sherrill. The Episcopal prelate said that he was not concerned with the play as an attack on religion, but characterized it as "essentially vulgar."

FAMILIES FLEE BLAZE IN DORCHESTER

Six women and five children barely escaped with their lives, today, when a fire raced through a six apartment building at 9 Balsam street, Dorchester.

The fire apparently started on the first floor in an apartment occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Abraham Wolfson and worked through the walls, breaking through on the third floor.

When firemen arrived, the flames were coming from windows on every floor of the building.

The blaze was brought under control after a battle of more than an hour. Damage was estimated at approximately $6000.

PLANT STAYS After Help Takes Cut

Salem, Jan. 17 (AP)—The Salem shoe Manufacturing Company, which planned to remove its plant to Milton, N. H., today accepted the offer of 250 former employes to take a 15 per cent wage reduction and decided to retain its Salem plant.

The plant will reopen tomorrow.

Chief Irked, Quits

Marblehead is without a fire chief.

Chief John T. Oliver resigned as head of the department today because more than 150 members of the call fire department are "fair weather" firemen who don't like to work on Sundays or holidays.

SNOW WILL TURN TO RAIN AND ICE

Today's snow will be tonight' rain if the weather man's weather eye is glinting properly—and if this does occur, driving conditions tonight will be nerve-wracking indeed, because the rain will freeze as it lands.

From indications tonight's temperature will be just below freezing, the weather man said, making for hazardous conditions.

The mercury today dropped to 14 for the low point, this mark being registered at 1 a. m.

By 10 a. m., the temperature had risen to 27 and was due to go a couple of points higher.

Southeast storm warnings were posted at 5 p. m., from Sandy Hook, N. J., to Eastport, Me., predicting east to southeast gales by night.

In Middlesex county, the second coldest night of the current winter was recorded.

Concord recorded 1 above and Lexington 1 below zero.

Information that between two and four inches of snow would fall before the storm turned to rain caused Public Works Commissioner Christopher J. Carven this afternoon to order out 120 snowplows.

Carven said that no outside help would be employed for the snow removal.

CURLEY ARRIVES at Washington

Washington, Jan. 17—Governor James M. Curley of Massachusetts arrived here today with a $70,000,000 public works work-and-wages program for which he seeks partial federal financing.

He went immediately to interview PWA Administrator Ickes and ERA Administrator Hopkins.

He may call at the White House for a conference with the President.

Accompanying the Governor on his trip is former Congressman Peter F. Tague, who is to succeed William E. Hurley as Boston postmaster, the Governor said.

Bonus Delayed

Washington, Jan. 17 (AP)—The House Ways and Means Committee decided today to side-track the bonus temporarily in order to expedite action on the President's social security program.

100 Locked in Mines in Fear of Nazis

By International News Service Staff Correspondent

Saarbrucken, Jan. 17—Fearful of triumphant Nazis, more than the French men, women and children locked themselves in the stuffy recess of Zhach coal mines today, pleading for a police or military escort to take them to a railway station and out of the Saar.

Scores of others were hidden in nearly every French mining building, while violent threats went the rounds that anti-Nazi Saarlanders might be horsewhipped or their house burned.

A total of 8000 naturalized French Saarlanders, each fearing Nazi reprisals, were in the mad rush to get out of the Saar.

JURY TOLD HOW BABY'S BODY WAS FOUND

GRAVE Dug Foot DEEP

CHILD FACED DOWN IN MUD

child's face was in good condition, "although the body generally was in a bad state of decomposition."

The physician said the facial features of the child were sufficiently similar to a photograph of the Lindbergh baby to convinch im of the identity.

Q—How many autopsies have you performed in your experience, doctor? A—Probably a thousand.

Q—As a result of your autopsy on the body, did you determine the cause of death? A—There was no question as to the cause of death. The child died of a fractured skull.

Q—Would you say it was caused by external violence? A—The fracture gave every indication of it.

Dr. Mitchell described the fractured skull and said:

"It was a very extensive fracture."

Q—Can you tell us the time of death as related to the fracture?

Frederick A. Pope of the defense objected, saying the doctor had not told of examining for other possible causes of death.

"Is it possible," said Justice Trenchard, "that an experienced physician cannot express an opinion under the circumstances?"

The justice directed that an answer be given. Pope asked for an exception.

Dr. Mitchell then answered:

"I would say that death occurred instantaneously or within a very few minutes after the fracture."

"The fracture occurred on the living child," the doctor added. "It bled. There was a blood clot on the skull.

"The blood clot could not have come there if the child was dead.

Reilly Opens Cross-Fire

Dr. Mitchell was cross-examined by Attorney Reilly.

Reilly wanted to know if Mitchell was on the staff of any hospital.

"Not since 15 years ago," the witness answered.

Q—Did you ever perform an autopsy on a two-year-old child? A—Yes.

Q—When? I can't recall.

Dr. Mitchell said the attorney-general has his report on the Lindbergh baby autopsy he performed in the detention morgue.

Q—Did you examine the heart of the child? A—The heart was in such condition it couldn't be examined.

Q—The lung? A—There was no lung.

Q—The stomach? A—There was no stomach.

Q—The kidney? There was none.

Q—Your examination was perfunctory? A—No. I'd say it was a good one.

Lindbergh's Faced Flushed

Colonel Lindbergh sat immobile during the testimony about his baby, his face slightly flushed.

Manning, pale and impassive, seemed interested. He quietly eyed the witness, his poker face in no way betraying his feelings.

Q—How long did I k you a determine the cause of death? A—First I made an external examination; then I attempted to open the skull and found this fracture. There was no laceration of the scalp over the fracture. The brain substance itself was just past doing anything to it. A thick comp, I should say. There was a section of the skull about 2½ inches in diameter, radiating from the center of the fracture. On the opposite side of the head there was a hole.

Reilly went after Dr. Mitchell vigorously.

Q—Did you ever see that child alive? A—No.

Q—You didn't know but what the child was suffering from a cold or bad chest condition? A—I opened—

Q—(Interrupting) answer my question—did you? A—(Shouting) You let me answer the question! I opened up the chest and throat and could find no evidence of a bad cold condition.

Q—Then, doctor, your examination must have been perfunctory? A—(Indignantly and loudly) No! It was a very thorough examination.

Organs 'Beyond Examination'

Dr. Mitchell told Reilly that most of the child's organs were so decomposed they "were beyond examining."

Q—I am interested in the condition of the organ where death was inflicted. A—That was the skull. There was a plain clotting of the blood there.

Q—How many children, two years of age who died of a skull fracture, have you performed autopsies on. A—I can't answer that. I've seen many skull fractures.

Reilly wanted to know how long it would take for a child of two to die of exposure in New Jersey in March if his body was in an exposed condition.

"Well, it could die within 24 hours or it might live longer," the witness said. He would not be pinned down on the question.

Q—What if it was in a bronchial condition so that it had to have "Vicks" rubbed on it?

The doctor refused to answer the question specifically.

Dr. Mitchell vigorously denied he thought the body died from a bullet wound.

Q—Didn't you at first think the hole in the baby's head was a bullet hole—until told that a policeman had caused it with a stick—and that that caused death. A—I never did think that a bullet hole was the cause of death.

Q—If a bullet had caused death would the bullet have been in the child's body. A—No. Not in that hole. It would have gone on through.

This testimony seemed effective-ly to dispose of the theory that the baby's death was due to a gun wound. The theory was advanced when a small pistol was found secreted in Hauptmann's garage with some of the Lindbergh ransom bills found there.

Movies Taken in Morgue

Reilly tried to give the impression the physician was responsible to some extent for the wide publicity the autopsy was given.

Q—Dr. Mitchell, were you responsible for permitting the moving picture men to enter the morgue and take pictures of the baby's body. A—It was not!

Q—Isn't it a fact that a regular moving picture studio was set up, the same as in this courtroom, with lights and everything and pictures were taken with your knowledge

A (shouting)—No, sir! No, siree!! I did not know anything about this and I won't be held responsible for anything like that. I heard that night that some people wanted to take pictures of the body and I sent police to stop it.

The spectators followed the cross-examination of Dr. Mitchell closely. Every seat in the tiny courtroom was taken, many persons stood in the aisles and some were perched on the window sills. The balcony was full.

Q (by Reilly)—Did you use a saw on the skull of this little child in performing an autopsy, the same as you would on a man? A—I started to and then I stopped because it was tearing the skull apart.

Q—And did you photograph the blood clots you say you saw in the skull? A—No.

A—And still do you say you performed a good autopsy? A—I am well satisfied. I didn't take a photograph of that blood clot, but it's as clear in my mind as a picture.

Reilly's sharp questioning drew equally sharp answers from Dr. Mitchell.

Q—There were no prisoners arrested at the time you performed the autopsy. Suppose you had died before there was an arrest in this case? How would the blood clot have been described then? A—I dont know.

Q—What does the law provide about the recording of evidence in such a case? A—I don't know.

Q—(Thundering) Do you mean to say you don't know the law on these things and yet you testify in homicidal cases? A—I don't know the law on that point.

"That's all," said Reilly.

William J. Alen, Negro laborer, who found the Lindbergh baby's body in a shallow grave on the Mt. Rose road 72 days after the kidnaping, was the first witness called to the stand.

The humble, bashful Negro was directed by Assistant Attorney-General Robert Peacock to tell of finding the body on May 12.

Q—Were you on the Mt. Rose road on May 12? A—Yes.

Q—Who was with you. A—Orville Wilson.

Allen then related how he went into the woods.

Q—How deep in the woods did you go? A—Thirty yards.

Q—What was the character of the woods? Bushy? A—Yes.

Q—What did you see? A—I saw a skeleton on the ground.

"I looked at it and I said, 'Gee, that looks like a human being.' I saw a foot. I called Wilson. I told him not to touch it and we went on," he said.

Allen told how he hurried to Hopewell to notify authorities.

Q—Did you see any police officer in Hopewell? A—I did after I looked for one.

Q—Did you report the finding of the body? A—I did.

Shown Picture of Kidnap Grave

The Negro identified a photograph showing the wooded glade and the body as it was when it was found.

The state completed questioning of the Negro in short order and C. Lloyd Fisher, defense counsel, immediately objected to introduction of the photograph of the body lying in the thicket.

Allen, answering Fisher's question, said he had not seen the photograph taken.

Justice Trenchard overruled Fisher's objection and allowed the picture to be admitted.

Reilly took the witness for cross-examination, and asked him if he could designate on a map the Mount Rose road near which the body was found.

The laborer pored over the map exhibits for some minutes, then shook his woolly head ruefully. He wasn't able to indicate the roads Reilly wanted.

Q—Can you stand on that road and see Colonel Lindbergh's home off to the right? A—Right straight ahead. Yes, sir.

Q—From where your truck stood, how many miles would it be by road to Colonel Lindbergh's home? A—About four miles and a half.

Q—That's all scrub oak, isn't it. The road runs through the woods? A—Not all. The road is macadam.

Q—This spot was how far in from the road? A—About thirty yards.

Q—Something attracted your attention? A—It was very brushy. About five feet high. I ducked my head and when I looked up I saw the skeleton about ten feet away.

Reilly then led the witness through a faltering account of how the body looked when he found it.

Grave Dug Foot Deep

The body was "on top of the ground," he recalled, as he started to describe the grave.

"It (the grave) looked like a hole about that long." (About three feet.)

"It was dug about a foot deep. The dirt was turned up. It had rained on the dirt and body."

Q—The body was lying on its face? Correct? A—Yes. On its face.

Q—Did it indicate to you it (the grave) had been freshly dug? A—No, sir.

Allen, describing for Reilly the property opposite the spot, said it was owned by a "sort of hospital for children who have no parents." (Hopewell Orphanage).

Orville Wilson, a pink-cheeked man with thinning brown hair, was called to corroborate Allen's story.

In his first few questions Peacock had the witness bring out that the spot where the body was found was only a short distance from a concrete highway which led to Hopewell.

Colonel Lindbergh, who had come into court during the previous testimony, listened intently.

"About what time was the body found," Peacock asked.

"It runs in my mind at 2 or 2:30."

Saw Foot of a Child

He told of the character of the underbrush in which the body was found.

Q—Describe what you saw. A—Well I saw the body of a child. You would see the foot of a child lying there. It was pretty well composed—I mean decomposed.

Q—See any clothes on the body? A—I think I saw a part of a shirt.

Q—Any leaves on the body? A—Around it.

Wilson identified the photograph of the scene and told of driving off with Allen to notify Officer Charles E. Williamson of the Hopewell police.

His direct examination was completed and cross-examination was begun by Fisher.

Q—There wasn't any path leading to the spot then? A—No. I don't recollect any path. There was dead grass. There was brush, low squatty brush.

Q—Timber? A—Some, yes.

Q—There was a ditch along the road? A—Yes.

Q—Weren't there two ditches. A—Now, I don't know.

Q—Mr. Allen spoke of the body as a skeleton. Is that the way you found it? A—Well, I suppose the foot and the bones were skeleton. He probably noticed them.

Foot Lay Away From Body

Q—The foot—? A—The foot lay a little way from the body.

Q—Away from the rest of it? A—Yes, a little distance.

Fisher asked if the witness recalled what the weather was in March, 1932, but Wilson could not recall.

Q—How far from the main road was the Hopewell orphanage? A—Not very far. Possibly 1500 feet. I don't just really know.

Q—You wouldn't want to say to this jury that the main road is more than half a mile from the orphanage, would you? A—No.

Q—And it was about half a mile from where the baby's body was found to the orphanage, wasn't it? A—That might be a fair estimate.

"That's all," said Fisher.

Sergeant Andrew Zapolsky of the New Jersey state police was then called. He testified that on May 12, 1932, he was at the Lindbergh estate. With other police he went from there to the Mount Rose road, where the baby's body was found.

Q—Arriving at the scene what did you do. A—Turned the body over.

Q—How did you find the body. A—It was lying face down, partly covered with leaves and dirt. He was partly dressed.

Q—What did you do. A—I turned the body over and compared it to a picture we had of Colonel Lindbergh's baby.

He said it

"It was Colonel Lindbergh's child."

Zapolsky told how he notified Police Inspector Harry Walsh of Jersey City and Captain J. J. Lamb of the state police of the discovery and how he went on out to take statements from Allen and Wilson.

6 Miles From Lindy's Home

The sergeant said they telephoned the Lindbergh home and Colonel H. Norman Schwarzkopf, head of the New Jersey state police, came down. The witness pointed out the spot on the map behind th witness chair.

Q—What is the distance from the spot where the body was found to the Lindbergh home? A—In my judgment it would be 5½ to 6 miles.

Defense Attorney Fisher took up the cross-examination.

Q—You were the first police officer on the scene. A—Yes.

Q—And you say there were three other police with you? A—Yes.

Q—Now this picture (holding up a photograph) was taken after the baby's body had been turned over by you. A—Yes.

Q—Then the scene shown in the picture is not the same as Allen said it was when he first came across the body that day, is it?

Peacock objected to this question and was sustained.

Fisher pounded away at the witness.

Q—Well, the body was face down when you arrived that day wasn't it? A—Yes.

Q—You turned it over and it was then face up, as in this picture, isn't that right? A—Yes.

Q—There was an orphanage near the place the body was found, wasn't there? A—Yes.

Q—Was there anything found near the body in the way of tools or implements? A—Not that I know of.

Q—Wasn't there a chisel and a tack hammer found near there? A—No. Not that I know of.

The witness was excused.

Inspector Harry Walsh of the Jersey City police was then called. Dressed in a blue suit, the gray-haired Walsh, a widely known police officer, answered the questions of Attorney-General Wilents in a crisp voice.

Q—You accompanied Sergeant Zapolsky to where the baby was found on May 12, didn't you? A—Yes, sir.

Q—Who went with you? A—Lieutenant Arthur Keaton of the New Jersey state police.

Q—What did you do? A—I viewed the body and returned to the Lindbergh home.

Q—When you went back to the Lindbergh home after seeing the body did you get a piece of material there? A—Yes, sir.

Wilents showed the witness a square strip of flannel.

Q—Is this it? A—No.

Q—You did get a piece of cloth? A—I did.

The correct piece of cloth was produced.

Q—What did you do then? A—I matched it to the piece of cloth that was on the body in the form of a shirt.

Walsh was handed the remnant of shirt found on the body. He showed how it fitted perfectly on one edge to the piece of cloth he brought from the Lindbergh home.

Q—Then what did you do? A—I took the cloth to where the baby's body was and compared it to the sleeping suit on the body.

Q—Was it the same material? A—Yes.

Wilents then removed from an envelope the stained sleeping suit found on the dead baby.

"Is this the sleeping suit you refer to?" Wilents asked, holding up the pitiful garment.

"It is," Walsh replied.

Q—Then what did you do? A—I lifted the body about an inch with a stick.

Q—And what happened. A—The stick penetrated the babys' skull.

Q—Was it an accident. A—Yes. The body was badly decomposed.

Q—How big a hole did the stick make. A—About the size of a lead pencil.

Q—So this accounts for the hole in the skull. A—Yes.

Q—And it was an accident. A—Yes.

Q—What else did you find there. A—I found a blonde hair four or five inches long in a sort of semi-circle where the baby's head had lain.

"You may take the witness," said Wilents.

Quizzed on Hole in Skull

Under cross-examination by Fisher, Walsh said the "grave" was between 2½ and 3 feet long.

A—Isn't it possible that the body was laid on the ground and, through nature, gradually worked down? A—Yes, that's possible.

Q—How long was the time between the kidnaping and the time the body was found? A—March 1 to May 13; about 73 days.

Q—Did you report making this hole in the head with a stick to Dr. Mitchell, Mercer County medical examiner. A—No.

Q—To Coroner Swayze? A—No.

Q—When did you first tell anybody of this hole? A—I told Colonel Schwarzkopf the same day.

Q—Why did you have to use a stick? A—The body was infested with vermin.

Q—Couldn't you have used gloves? A—I had no gloves.

Q—Did you ever see a tack hammer, said to be found near that scene? A—No.

Q—Did you ever see after that date in the hands of the police a tack hammer said to have been found near the scene?

Wilents's objection was sustained.

Asks If Hammer Was Found

Fisher again wanted to know whether Walsh had found a hammer, a chisel or a shovel at the scene of the baby's grave or knew of any other police having done so. Walsh said he knew nothing of the finding of any such implements.

Q—Did you know whether there was an orphanage investigation near the scene? A—No.

Q—Didn't you investigate the ownership of the property around there? A—No. I was working under the direction of superiors and I was not instructed to do this.

Walsh said "the scalloped, embroidered edges" convinced him the two pieces of flannel were identical.

"You're not an expert on sewing?"

"I'm not interested in sewing." The witness was then excused.

Coroner Took Body to Morgue

Coroner Walter H. Swayze, who certified the death of the Lindbergh baby, was the next witness. He said he lives in Trenton.

He is a dark-complexioned, young-looking man. He was questioned by Assistant Attorney-General Peacock.

The coroner said he received a call on May 12, 1932, to go to Mount Rose road. When he arrived, he went into the woods.

Swayze said:

"There was the body of a child which looked like a mummified specimen of about two years, head toward the woods.

"I placed it in a removal grip and took it to the Trenton morgue."

The next day Colonel Lindbergh came to the morgue and identified the body as that of his child," said Swayze.

Defense Attorney Fisher objected, saying he wanted to know how Lindbergh identified it and what he said.

Peacock said:

"Colonel Lindbergh has testified that he identified the body."

Fisher was over-ruled.

This testimony was admitted over that vigorous objections of defense counsel.

"Were you present when Colonel Lindbergh made the identification?" Peacock asked.

"I was," said Swayze.

Q—And were you present when Death Silenced Fisch; Four Come to Speak for Him!

MINNA STEIGLITZ DETECTIVE JOHNSON MRS. CZERNA FISCH PINCUS FISCH HANNA FISCH

Dead men tell no tales! Bruno Hauptmann knows it. He knew it when he said that Isidor Fisch, dead and buried in Germany, gave him the Lindbergh ransom money "for safe-keeping." But, though Isidor Fisch cannot take the witness stand, not one but four voices will speak for him. They are the voices of Minna Steiglitz, Fisch's nurse; Mrs. Czerna Fisch, a sister-in-law; Pincus Fisch, the dead man's brother; and Hanna Fisch, a sister; all shown above with Detective Arthur Johnson, who brought the witnesses here from Germany.

Anonymous

Flemington, N. J., Jan. 17—It is by numerals, which are seldom adequately disguised in anonymous letters, that handwriting can best be identified, T. Clark Sellers of Los Angeles, prosecution witness told the court.

Certain characteristics of the writing and especially of the numerals, he said, were so convincing to him "that Mr. Hauptmann might just as well have signed the ransom notes."

Feeds 'Army'

By Associated Press

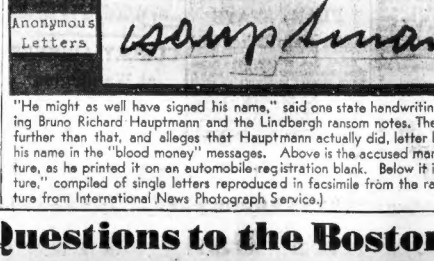
Flemington, N. J., Jan. 17—Mrs. B. E. Fedrick believes that trial fans, like Napoleon's army, travel on their stomachs.

As staff chief of the Union Hotel's dining room, she has seen the army of visitors consume a half-ton of onions and almost two tons of potatoes since the Hauptmann trial began.

They have eaten 400 loaves of bread, 4,000 rolls, 2,000 minute steaks, 1800 chickens, 420 pies, 60 cakes and 96 legs of lamb. Almost 1000 quarts of milk have disappeared; 253 quarts of cream, 24 puddings and 720 gallons of coffee.

Did Bruno 'Sign' Own Name?

Prosecution Says He Did Unwittingly



"He might as well have signed his name," said one state handwriting expert, connecting Bruno Richard Hauptmann and the Lindbergh ransom notes. The prosecution goes further than that, and alleges that Hauptmann actually did, letter by letter, print out his name in the "blood money" messages. Above is the accused man's admitted signature, as he printed it on an automobile registration blank. Below it is the same "signature," compiled of single letters reproduced in facsimile from the ransom notes. (Picture from International News Photograph Service.)

Uh-Huh Goes

By Associated Press

Flemington, N. J., Jan. 17—A colloquial affirmative appeared today in the official court record of the Hauptmann murder trial.

Edward J. Reilly, chief of defense counsel, pointed to a map and asked William Allen, negro laborer who was relating the finding of the body of the Lindbergh baby, "This is Rileyville over here?"

The answer, in the official record, was:

TOO HORRIBLE TO LISTEN TO

STORY OF BABY'S DEATH LEAVES HER 'COLD'

By Adela Rogers St. Johns

Flemington, N. J., Jan. 17—There is no use pretending that I heard all that went on in the Hauptmann courtroom this morning.

I couldn't listen. I didn't want to listen.

For we followed a soft-voiced colored gentleman into a woods and there on the cold ground, we found the body of the murdered Lindbergh baby, and we saw them lift it from the ground with a stick—and the stick slipped and made a hole in the already battered head.

Such a little ways from home, the poor baby. But too far ever to go back.

Covered with leaves so that only the blonde curls showed at first.

They cut off the little shirt that was all the murdered had left him for that last sleep, and took it home to Anne Lindbergh's nursey and hung it up to dry, because it was wet with the rain that had been beating down upon the dead body.

Then She Knew

And Anne Lindbergh came and looked at that little shirt.

Then she knew.

Perhaps, in some way too sad to think about, there was joy in her heart when she saw this shirt. For if hope was gone forever, so was suspense, fear and horrible imaginings that must have tortured her day and night.

Her baby was dead. But he was safe—somewhere — somewhere all mothers' believe their babies go when they leave us.

Courageously she could face that last and final thing called death.

You grow a little sick as you listen—and try to stop listening—and cannot.

We followed Lindbergh into an undertaking parlor, saw him stand a moment in silence, looking down at the little face he had seen so often, smiling and safe, upon Anne Lindbergh's breast.

Then they told us, he nodded and turned away.

Face Purple

I looked across the courtroom then at Colonel Lindbergh. Today he is nearer Hauptmann than he has ever been before.

There is only one seat between them, in which sits a stolid blue-clad trooper.

His face was purple, the back of his neck was purple. It would not have surprised me if he had flunk himself across those three feet upon Hauptmann, the man he believes put that little corpse there on a night almost three years ago.

"The body was in pretty bad shape, wasn't it?" Defense Counsel Fisher flung at Sergeant Walsh.

Why do they speak like that?

"In pretty bad shape."

Am I over-sensitive? Am I sick with this horror so that I have lost my perspective? But—but—the body was that of a little baby, who had been killed.

I wish he had spoken a little more kindly, a little more reverently.

I think that never in a courtroom have I seen anything quite as offensive as the way Defense Attorney Fisher picked up that little shirt.

Couldn't we handle it just a little more gently? It would help all of us, I think, to bear the ugly, sordid, terrible details, if there was a little reverence.

True, it later scame ba shroud.

Now it is just state's exhibit No. 13.

We are trying a murder case—and it must be tried as a murder case.

Cold Logic

But I don't think we'd maudlin or anything, if we remembered that this little shirt once upon a time was made by loving hands of a fine young American woman for her only son.

They proved the Lindbergh baby had died.

Some one, by accident, or by design, had crushed its soft baby skull.

I want to go away from here. I don't want to hear about that baby's body any more.

Maybe, in cold hard logic, it's no worse to kill a baby than to kill a man or woman.

My reason might tell me that. My heart never can.

ROBBERY!

Police Commissioner Joseph J. Leonard can no longer gaze upon the beaming countenance of his predecessor, Eugene C. Hultman whose photo had been on the commissioner's desk.

It disappeared yesterday, and police believe that an admirer of the former police head has taken it home with the intention of placing it in a position of honor.

A Fleeting, Quizzical Smile, This One

Guards Amuse Bruno, That's Why He Smiles

By Jeanette Smits
International News Service Special Correspondent

Flemington, N. J., Jan. 17—A curious, inscrutable smile twists the corners of Bruno Richard Hauptmann's full, sensuous lips as he makes his way daily through the gaping, shoving crowds in the tightly packed courtroom here.

Why does he smile?

Mrs. Anna Hauptmann for the first time revealed the reason today.

Her husband—even in the midst of a grim, desperate struggle to save himself from the electric chair—is amused, Mrs. Hauptmann declared:

"He thinks the way they guard him, the way they take care that he should not escape, is funny. Because he does not want to escape. He has nothing to fear from this trial. He is willing to see it through."

Each time the two burly state troopers grab his wrists and yank him through the mob of spectators the thin, gray-white features of the prisoner reflect his inner enjoyment of the situation. His wife said:

"They do not have to hold him that way. They should know Richard will not run away from them."

"He asks me always about the baby. He asks me if I eat enough, if I am out in the open air enough so that I do not get sick. He wants to know if I have enough money."

FISCH Kin May Not TESTIFY

FAMILY NOW IN SECLUSION

By International News Service

Trenton, N. J., Jan. 17—Brought over from Germany at considerable expense, Pincus Fisch and fellow members of his party went into seclusion today, not at all certain they would even be called to testify.

Only if the defense in the trial of Bruno Richard Hauptmann tries definitely to make a formal case against Isidor Fisch will the deceased furrier's brother, sister, sister-in-law and nurse be put on the stand. Attorney-General Wilentz summed up the state's plans in this fashion:

"They may put words in the mouths of dead people, but they won't put words in the mouths of live people, even if we have to scour the entire globe."

Even should they be called, it was doubtful whether any deathbed statement by Fisch would be revealed. In a talk with a reporter Pincus said:

"When Isidor was in his last moments he spoke a lot. But we could not understand what he was saying because he spoke in English."

Pincus does not speak English, and all questions must be addressed to him in German.

Faith in Brother

"I will tell my story," he went on, "and everyone will know that my brother had nothing to do with this crime."

His wife, Cecma, and his sister, Hanna, nodded energetically in agreement. Only the white-haired, stately Minna Steignitz, the nurse who attended Fisch before he died in Leipzig, maintained a dignified aloofness.

Pincus made it clear that even if he could not reveal any death-bed statement from his brother, his intimate knowledge of Fisch's last living acts will enable him to remove any suspicion from a man who is beyond defending himself.

For the next few weeks, the Fisches and Frau Steignitz will leave their rooms only to have their meals in a nearby restaurant and to enjoy an occasional automobile ride, under strict supervision.

DIVORCE FAILS

"I sent her a heart-shaped bouquet of violets and then called on her hoping for a reconciliation, but she threw the flowers in my face!"

Such was the testimony offered by John A. Menzies, 37, a Cambridge dental technician, in Middlesex Probate court in asking a divorce from his wife, Mrs. Theresa M. Menzies, who contested the action.

Judge John C. Leggat decided that there was not enough evidence of cruelty to warrant granting a decree.

Famous Hollywood Names Rouse Jurors

EXPERT PROBED DEATHS

By DOROTHY ROE
Universal Service Staff Correspondent

Flemington, N. J., Jan. 17—A breath of Hollywood swept the packed courtroom here as the names of Mae West, Rudolph Valentino and Jean Harlow were duly entered on the court record at the trial of Bruno Richard Hauptmann.

The men and women of the jury looked with new interest at the witness on the stand, James Clark Sellers, handwriting expert of Los Angeles.

He listed the following qualifications of his experience:

"I examined disputed documents in the mysterious death of Paul Bern, husband of Jean Harlow."

Sellers, a tall, dignified and meticulously dressed gentleman, with hair graying at the temple, also stated that he had testified as a handwriting expert in a case involving Eric Pedley, polo star, and added that he is a lecturer on disputed documents at the University of Southern California.

Even the stolid Hauptmann, who has sat in apparent boredom through the state's parade of handwriting experts on the witness stand, seemed to register interest in the fact that a resident of the glittering land of Hollywood had crossed the continent to testify about the way a Bronx carpenter crossed his T's.

Mrs. Hauptmann, sitting wearily at the defense counsel table, a new black hat covering her bedraggled blonde hair, looked up in momentary surprise. Since the technical testimony of the handwriting experts began, the loyal wife of the prisoner has appeared dazed.

She has heard one after another of the state's scholars announce in sure, authoritative tones:

"The man who wrote the ransom notes is Bruno Richard Hauptmann."

And when the gentleman from Hollywood took the stand this afternoon, with huge exhibits carried through the crowd by two court attendants, it all seemed too much to Anni Hauptmann. She muttered confusedly:

"What has Mae West to do with my Richard's handwriting?"

LADDER Maker Gets THREAT

DEATH NOTE TO SAMUELSOHN

New York, Jan. 17—A letter threatening death to Abe Samuelsohn, Bronx wood carver who claims he made the kidnap ladder for Bruno Richard Hauptmann and the ransom money box for Dr. John F. Condon, was turned over to police here by Samuelsohn's lawyer.

The signature of the letter was a poor imitation of the interlocking symbols used by the writer of the Lindbergh baby ransom notes.

The note said:

"You are herewith warned to keep your mouth shut under penalty of dead. Do not dare to testify at any trial. We will get you if you disregard this warning. Note this signature."

MORGAN Employes on STAND

TESTIFY ON RANSOM BILLS

Betty Gow also identified the child? A—I was.

A—As a result of that postmortem did you issue a death certificate for Charles Augustus Lindbergh, Jr.? A—I did.

The certificate was offered in evidence.

"We want to submit an objection in order to examine the certificate,' said Fisher.

"We have a statute on that," said Justice Trenchard.

"Yes," said Fisher, "we know about that statute. It was drawn by Mr. Pope, who sits at our counsel table."

It was admitted into evidence.

Reilly Asks One Question

The witness asked only one question. It was:

"Did you file this death certificate on information given you by someone else?"

"Yes, sir," the witness answered.

Swavze then was excused.

Dr. Mitchell was then called and gave his testimony as recorded.

Morgan Employes Go on Stand

Stuart W. Cragin, of Bedford Village, N. Y., followed Dr. Mitchell. He testified he was an employe of J. P. Morgan and Company. Under the questioning of Prosecutor Anthony M. Hauck, he described how he had helped make up the $50,000 Lindbergh ransom money and an additional package of $20,000 in March, 1932.

Cragin said the money was taken from the bank to the home of Francis D. Bartow, a Morgan partner, who lives at 57 East 66th street, New York city.

He said the $70,000 was locked in a closet of Bartow's bedroom.

Cragin said that on Saturday morning, April 2, 1932, he again went to the Bartow home. The money was taken out and counted. They (bank employes) saw that the proper denominations were there and it was left in Bartow's home.

The witness was not cross-examined.

Longstreet Hinton of New York, another Morgan employe, then took the stand and corroborated Cragin's story. He told of making up the ransom bills and was quickly excused without cross-examination.

Stephen Reynolds of New York, another Morgan employe, likewise corroborated Cragin's story.

Harry E. Schneider, manager of the Corn Exchange Bank of New York, and William F. Wilkinson, assistant manager of the bank, next testified, telling how the ransom bills were kept for the last week of March, 1932, in the book valut of their bank.

Call for Ransom Bills

They said the bills were available to no one but themselves until the morning of April 2—the day the ransom was paid—when a couple of Morgan men called for it.

Francis D. Bartow, a Morgan partner, was the next witness.

He told how the ransom money packages were brought to his home in Ne wYork from the Corn Exchange Bank and there turned over by his butler to Al Reich, Dr. John F. Condon's friend.

Tom Tring, Bartow's butler, corroborated Bartow's testimony. Asked who had the key to the closet where the money was held, he said he did.

Court adjourned for the luncheon recess until 1:45 p. m.

More Hauptmann trial testimony in later editions.

Police Hunt Thief

Lynn police are today hunting for a young man who went to the home of Mrs. Isador Beckerman in Henry avenue, Lynn, represented himself as a Lynn Gas & Electric repairman, and stole $7. The money was taken when Mrs. Beckerman went to the cellar to shut off the electricity.

Holdup Victim

Theodore Paashl, 45, of Poplar street, West End, was held up by two men in the hall of his home, beaten and robbed of $45.

He was hit over the head with a blunt instrument. At Haymarket Relief Station four stitches were required to close the wound. Four men were later picked up and held for questioning.

IN DEATH DROP

By Universal Service

New York, Jan. 17—Mrs. Pauline Kopp, 43-year-old, 200-pound landlady, went shopping and forgot the key to her apartment on the top floor of a four story building.

When she borrowed a clothesline from a neighbor, fastened it to a vent pipe on the roof, and tried to lower herself on the rope from the roof to her apartment window, the rope parted and she was dashed to death in the yard below.

Woman Saved From Flames

An aged woman was rescued and a dozen other persons fled to safety from a two-alarm fire in Beacon street, near the Brookline line today.

An hour before 40 students would have occupied the building, flames swept four floors of the Beacon Institute of Podiatry and the New England Foot Clinics at 914 Beacon ried to the street.

The fire broke through into the apartment building at 916 Beacon.

Total damage was between $5000 and $10,000. The cause was given as an overheated pipe.

Two doors away, ten years ago this month, the Scobie Hospital was swept by a fatal blaze.

Issac Vandenbrock, clerk in the school, was the only occupant of the building at 914 Beacon street when the fire was discovered in the basement.

From the top floor of 916 Beacon street, Mrs. Marion H. Pearson, 70, disabled by a broken leg, was carried to the street.

Others forced out included Ruth Chilton, radio singer, who rescued her pet kitten; Mr. and Mrs. Paul O'Leary; Mrs. Mary Silver and her aged father; Mr. and Mrs. John Campbell.

PRISON Trio Face DEATH

KIDNAP LAW TO BE INVOKED

San Quentin Prison, Cal., Jan. 17 (INS)—Speedy justice—possibly the gallows under California's new kidnap law—will be demanded by District Attorney Albert Bagshaw of Marin County for the remaining trio of the convict quartet who yesterday staged the sensational San Quentin prison break.

The fighting young prosecutor, who personally accounted for the fourth desperado with a load of buckshot, went into legal action.

Hopeful news came from the prison hospital, where Warden James B. Holohan, 63, was staging a game fight for life against a fractured skull and other injuries, inflicted by the convicts in their dash for freedom.

Likewise, Frank C. Sykes, president of the state board of prison farms and paroles, and Joseph H. Stephens, his colleague, two of the three kidnaped board members, were reported to be in no danger from gunshot wounds, suffered in the gun battle when the prisoners were captured.

In the meantime, prison officials were delving more deeply into the confession of the three captured convicts, now in the dungeons, that Clyde Stevens, notorious bank robber captured last night at Antioch, provided them with guns and engineered the smuggling of the weapons into the prison through an innocent third party.

SCENE OF DARING ESCAPE ATTEMPT AT ST. QUENTIN PRISON.

Warren Atherton, St. Quentin prison board member, kidnaped and held as hostage by convicts attempting escape.

James B. Holohan, St. Quentin prison warden, feared dying after being beaten by convicts.

Frank Sykes, prison board chairman, accidentally wounded in gun fight after being held as a hostage by escaping St. Quentin convicts.

Mark Noon, St. Quentin prison board secretary, kidnaped an held as hostage by escaping convicts.

NEWSPAPER ADS Stressed by Twomey

The importance of the newspaper to the retail advertiser was stressed in a talk at the New York convention of the National Retail Dry Goods Association by Harry F. Twomey, head of the H. F. Twomey Service for Retailers, of Boston, a former director of the association.

Harry F. Twomey

Mr. Twomey talked on "The New Importance of Store Selling Publicity," stressing newspaper campaigns that tell the story of the store in terms of merchandise.

He cited the examples of many Boston and New York stores and pointed out the splendid opportunities that 1935 holds for consistent newspaper advertisers.

PROTEST OIL FARM ON MISERY ISLAND

Representatives of the Massachusetts Division, New England Council, are to appear tonight before the Salem city council to protest against establishment of a proposed "oil farm" on Great Misery Island.

John S. Lawrence of Boston and Topsfield, chairman of the Massachusetts Division, issued a statement today expressing opposition to the oil farm on the ground that it would "militate against the continued growth of the recreational industry in the Commonwealth."

Summer and permanent residents of North Shore communities, as well as city and town fathers, have joined forces for tonight's protest.

Among those who have said they will appear to add their voices in opposition are Miss Eleonora Sears, Representative Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr., Richard D. Sears, Mrs. Joseph Leiter and members of the Peabody, Lee, Thorndike and Rantoul families.

Roosevelt for Old Age, Jobs Insurance

in their estimates used a maximum of $15 a week and no minimum.

They suggested that on the three per cent contribution basis, the maximum benefit period should be 15 weeks. The Federal Government would appropriate $50,000,000 annually to encourage the administration of state unemployment insurance laws.

Aid for Children

Aid to dependent children essentials:

The Treasury would allot $25,000,000 annually to be matched by states and used when the relief administrator approves state plans for dependent children's care.

Public health essentials:

The bill would appropriate $4,000,000 annually to be allotted among the states on a dollar-for-dollar basis for maternal and child health. Similarly, there would be appropriated $3,000,000 annually for the care of crippled children.

Under both allotments each state would receive $20,000 annually and more according to need.

For child welfare, there would be $2,500,000 annually with at least $10,000 for each state. General public health work would get $10,000,000 annually.

Administration plans include:

A social insurance board of three would be set up to supervise the old age and unemployment pension systems and assist the states. The labor and treasury departments, the relief administration and the public health service all would have a share in portions of the program.

Nearly every low income citizen, it was said, would find a way to save for his old age insurance plans.

The compulsory old age plan would affect all employes making $250 a month or less.

Pension Plans

For the employe who had paid premiums before 1942 the pension would amount to 15 per cent of his average monthly wage if only 200 weekly payments into the insurance fund had been made.

One per cent more would be added to the benefits for each additional 40 weeks of payments, up to 400 weeks, and 2 per cent more for each 40 weeks up to 800 weeks.

For the employe who paid premiums after 1942 the benefit would be 10 per cent of his average monthly wage and 1 per cent additional for each 40 weeks he paid in addition to the first 200 weeks.

For example, if premiums were paid for a laborer while he worked steadily from 20 to 65 years of age at an average wage of $60 a month, he would receive $40.80 a month for life after he retired.

The voluntary annuity system would be used by business and professional men not covered by the compulsory system, and also could be employed to augment compulsory insurance.

World Court Shelved, Senate Fears 'Showdown'

By International News Service

Washington, Jan. 17—Fearful of a "showdown" battle now on the question of American adherence to the League of Nation's World Court, Senate leaders today sidetracked that issue temporarily to call up the first of a long list of major appropriation bills.

The court's foes meanwhile rejoiced over the broadside attack on the institution by Senator Johnson (R) of California.

His speech, charging American entry into the court would embroil the United States in European controversies and carry it into the League of Nations through the back-door, was hailed as a masterpiece. Senator Reynolds (D) of North Carolina said:

"It was one of the finest speeches I have ever heard since entering the Senate. It confirmed me in my judgment to vote against the court.

"I thought Senator Johnson presented a masterly argumgnt against plunging the United States into European entanglements.

Johnson supported his opening attack on the court by offering four reservations to the resolution of ratification.

Through Johnson's action, these questions must be voted upon before a final vote can be reached on the resolution of adherence. Friends of the court are ready to attack them as needless precautions.

The measure before the Senate today is the independent offices appropriation bill, carrying $777,501,956 to operate a score of independent commissions and bureaus during the fiscal year of 1936.

Twelve other children, in addition to several firemen, are reported in serious condition. A search of the burned home is expected to yield the bodies of additional victims.

The fire started when film in a motion picture machine burst into flames, rapidly spreading to all parts of the room.

A 10-year-old girl and three stepsons of Mrs. Desmarteau, from six to ten years of age, are reported dead at St. Luce Hospital, where most of the injured were taken.

A few of those present were able to go home after treatment for less serious cuts and burns.

PANAMA CANAL GUARDS DOUBLED

By Universal Service

Cristobal, C. Z., Jan. 17—Never in the history of the Panama Canal has the "big ditch", keystone of the American navy's defense plans, been so closely guarded as it is now.

Ever since the recent transit of the United States fleet to the Pacific, heavy guard have been maintained along the canal on the locks.

Entrances to lock areas are enclosed with heavy iron fencing, topped by rows of barbed wire. Sentries, bayonets fixed, patrol vulnerable points. Army intelligence officers admit receipt to letters threatening sabotage.

CONFESSES HE KILLED 2, ROBBED GRAVES

By Associated Press.

Jackson, Miss., Jan. 17—The murder of two persons, mutilation of their bodies and theft of the bodies of five white women from graves was confessed today by James H. Coyner, giant Negro, District Attorney Greek Rice announced.

Coyner, a paroled convict from the Indiana state penitentiary in Michigan City, admitted, Rice said, battering to death with a hammer Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Turner of Cleveland, Miss., December 9; theft of the body of a girl from a grave in Indiana and desecration of burial places of four women in Ferndale, Mich.

The women's heads were found in a trunk owned by the Negro.

Van Loon Says:

War Goes on Merrily

Suppose that two years ago a tiny fire had broken out in the basement of an old storehouse somewhere in the heart of New York. Suppose that with all the engines and with all of the city's firemen and cops the officials had let that fire go on smouldering right in the heart of the city for two years.

The idea is preposterous. The very notion is absurd. If anyone were to tell you that such a thing had actually happened, you would tell him he was crazy.

And yet, exactly such an event has happened and continues to happen with undiminished violence and vigor right under our own eyes.

For almost two years, two small and obscure nations in the heart of South America have been doing murder upon each other.

But thousands upon thousands of people have died a miserable death in a fever-infested jungle for the sake of their country's "honor." And nobody, no League of Nations, no President of the United States of America or of Brazil, has apparently been powerful enough to bring these embittered patriots to reason.

It is not so very long ago (most of my readers will remember those days) when a great civil war, that had engaged the utmost energies of almost all the white races of the world, came to an end. After peace was finally signed, the decent part of humanity said: "That was once, and never again"

Won't they though! Had the people who spoke that way been familiar with the history of Paraguay.

In the year 1527 our friend Sebastian Cabot of Newfoundland had discovered the territory now know as Paraguay.

Until 1811 Paraguay was part of Spain. Then it gained its independence. That is to say, it became an autocracy ruled by the members of a single family. In 1862 a certain Creole Antonio Lopes succeeded his father as President. He is the sad hero of Paraguay's history!

When Lopes was finally killed the battle of Aquidaban in 1870, the population of Paraguay had been reduced from 1,400,000 to about 220,000, and of these only 28,000 were men and 110,000 were women. The rest were children.

The country was of course hopelessly in debt, and a Brazilian army of occupation remained behind until 1876 to try and collect a few pesos. Then Brazil gave it up as a hopeless task.

Pacifism is an ideal which would do well to have a little less faith in that old saw about man learning by experience." Perhaps man does, but then he is terribly slow about it.

HOLLAND

BEBE Daniels Coming With New Play

By GEORGE HOLLAND

Boston will probably see Ben Lyon, Bebe Daniels and Skeets Gallagher, a new starring trio, in a play called "No Man's A Hero," likely sometime in March.

Harry Wagstaff Gribble is about to begin rehearsals as director, and Kay Kenney, who wrote "The Moon Rises" and collaborated on other Shubert musical shows, is the author. M. S. Bentham is the producer.

* * *

Mentioning March brings to mind that the prospects for the windy month, as far as theatrical bookings are concerned, seem slim.

Bebe Daniels

"Dodsworth" will carry over at the Colonial for a week in March, but thus far no attraction has been announced for another theater.

* * *

"The First Legion" will be helped in its engagement at the Plymouth Theater by the banning of "Within the Gates."

Interest would have centered on the Sean O'Casey play. "The First Legion" is the work of another novitiate in the theater who began earning a living by writing on a newspaper. His name is Emmet Lavery, and a second play by Mr. Lavery called "Daisy Chain" has been making the rounds of the producing offices for more than a year.

"Daisy Chain" is a play about Vassar College and Mrs. Lavery is a Vassar graduate.

* * *

"The First Legion" is being heralded by John Pollock, one of the redoubtable members of the press agents' guild, who has returned to the theatrical business after a campaign in New Jersey politics, which, had it been successful, would have made Mr. Pollock a congressman. He seems very happy, having thought things over.

HOLLYWOOD

June Walker Goes Hollywood

"Farmer Loses Wife" Star Will Forsake Stage

JUNE WALKER

June Joins Fox Forces

By LOUELLA O. PARSONS

Motion Picture Editor Universal Service

(Copyright, 1935, by Universal Service)

Los Angeles, Jan. 17 (US)—One of the most accomplished actresses on the American stage, June Walker, who has been a favorite for over twelve years, is coming to Hollywood.

Winfield Sheehan, who has signed her for Fox, plans to give her vehicles especially suited to her dramatic talents.

He says his new star looks better than ever and is just as attractive as she was when she played in "Six Cylinder Love," "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes" and and other New York hits.

We'll be seeing June out our way just as soon as she finishes in "The Farmer Takes a Wife" in which she has staged an extraordinary success on Broadway. But the screen version of "The Farmer Takes a Wife" won't be listed among her pictures, since it has already been assigned to Janet Gaynor.

The movies have caught up with Noel Coward, noted playwright and actor. The siren voices of those two ex-newspaper men, Charles Macarthur and Ben Hecht, are responsible for Coward's change of heart. He has never cared particularly for the movies but now he has consented to join Charlie and Ben on January 26 at their film emporium, to play in "Miracle in 49th Street," an original by the two boys.

Fay Wray and John Monk Saunders apparently have found England and it is theirs. Fay sends word she will make two more pictures for British Gaumont before she sees the good old U. S. A. and that her husband who went to school in England and is a graduate of Oxford, will write for the same film company.

Shouldn't be surprised to see Fay and John remain for an even longer period, for British Gaumont has plenty of money back of them and they are just aching to get American talent.

Personality is a very intangible quality, the judges of the contest sponsored by the Boston Evening American and the Keith Memorial Theater discovered. Finally they decided to divide the first prize of $25. So now the title of "Miss Personality" is shared by Miss Marjorie Driscoll of Greenwood street, Hyde Park; Miss Mary Smith of Theodore street, Dorchester, and Miss Charlotte Isenberg of Brunswick street, Roxbury.

Three Split Personality Award

The "Miss Personality" Contest sponsored by this paper and the Keith Memorial Theater in conjunction with the showing of "Evergreen" came to a close yesterday afternoon.

The judges were no perplexed as to who to choose for a winner that they picked three girls, with the major prize of $25 distributed to Marjorie Driscoll of Hyde Park, Charlotte Isenberg of Roxbury and Mary Smith of Dorchester.

After some time of deliberation the judges, consisting of Charles W. Koerner of RKO Theaters, John J. Scully of British Gaumont pictures and Milton Blackstone, a representative of the famous star, Joe Penner, finally selected the three winners from a multitude of contestants.

Each girl entrant received a pair of guest tickets to the Keith Memorial Theater as a consolation prize.

GIFT TO THE BRIDE -:- Daily Short Story

Kitty Gives an Unmarred Wedding

Kitty Gilhooley sensed the finish. Things had gone too well. The law of averages had meant she was riding for a fall.

"I told you you'd crack up the racket, Frank. We can sell Hell's Essence if we kill conscience enough to do it. But we never had a chance when you went on the junk yourself."

"Aw, quit your bawling."

Blonde Kitty shook her head, wistfulness creeping in her eyes. She was a striking figure of a woman, even at 38.

SELLERS OF DOPE

"We've gone ten years, Frank Gilhooley, selling souls of others. We've dealt in worse than death."

"Aw, rub it in. You know I took the stuff to stop the pain at first, the pain of the old wound. And after that—well, you're right after that."

"But Frank, you might have gone away, so's not to ruin everything. You know I wanted to keep going six months more. It would have made things so we could have quit."

TIGER-LIKE ACTION

"Quit crying. That brat——"

Kitty Gilhooley lost the softness about her face. Tiger-like she leaped across the room. Her fingers caught in the coat of the man, or wreck of a man, there in the chair. She shook him as might a tiger with its prey. A knock on the door made her drop him to the floor.

The woman walked across the splendid living room. She opened a door. She smiled at the two men outside, the two who kept hands in their coat pockets, even as they flashed "buttons" of the narcotic division.

"Come in," Kitty Gilhooley said. "I know we can't get out. I know the place is covered. May I congratulate you and tell you you win?"

The two looked at one another. It seemed like a trick.

The woman shook her head.

"No camouflage. I know when I'm licked. Frank licked me. You got me, cold, because of him. I just want to make one proposition."

The two men with the "buttons" raised their eyebrows. They'd expected some sort of "proposition" from Kitty Gilhooley.

"No pay-off. Nothing phony. I just want to ask one favor in return for pleading guilty, guilty for both of us. I don't care what happens now. I just want to protect someone else. I just want to be sure no newspaper gets the pictures. If we get clear of pictures, we'll take the rap and go away. Please—I want to protect—well, protect the only person who still thinks of me as clean."

It worked out that way.

The train moved through the snow. In her compartment, Kitty Gilhooley wrote silently.

"Dorothy Dear:—(the letter ran)

"As I write this I can almost hear the organ pealing Mendelssohn. I can see you walking down the aisle. I can hear you answer 'I do.' I can see the glad light in his eyes—and yours.

"Today, of all days, I know I should be with you. On her wedding day every girl should have her mother. But sacrifice, Dolly dear, is something exacted of all of us. Your father's sickness, as I've told you, is something with but one chance in a million of a cure.

"We're going to be away five years. The treatment will either kill or cure him. Either way, it means I can't be with you on your wedding day.

"Later, perhaps, I will be able to be with you. It is snowing as I write. God bless you, girl of mine, and let your life be happy."

The girl read the letter on her honeymoon. She let the man who was her husband read it, too. Together they breathed out a sentence they believed, above all else:

"The most wonderful mother in the world."

Inside walls that seemed prayer in the winter fall of flakes, Kitty Gilhooley looked out at the world she might see again five years from then.

The wistfulness came again to her eyes—the softness to the corners of her mouth.

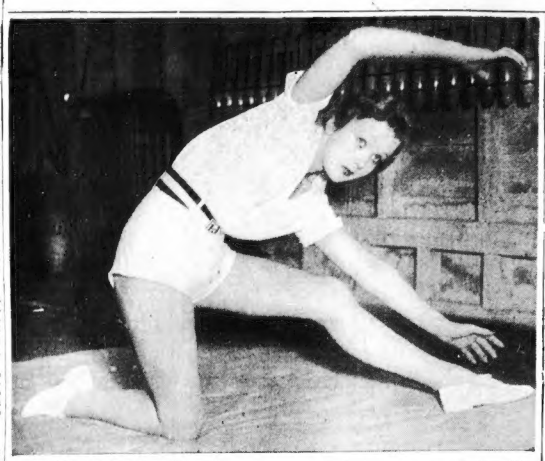
Exercise Is Way to Willowy Lines



HOLLYWOOD beauties, with every resource of clever masseuse and scientific diet advice at their finger tips, still realize the utmost value of exercise. Ida Lupino finds an arm swinging and waist bending exercise, done while kneeling, melts the waist line to sylph proportions.

By the Beauty Editor

IT MAKES NO difference what your problem is—if you feel that you are breaking down, run while you still have the strength to a new reconditioning salon and be properly put together again.

Under magic fingers of experts, those extra rolls of fat will be made to vanish into firm muscle, your circulation will be set dancing, and you'll feel so pleased at yourself that you'll stop sentimentalizing about Bermuda and that-trip-you-almost-took.

• • •

First of all you are put through a set of exercises—not too strenuous, but muscular enough to discourage any fatty tissue on hips and thighs. Then comes the electric vibrator which actually whirls away superfluous poundage and moulds flabby muscles into shape. The electric cabinet-bath takes the place of 15 minutes in a Turkish bath and gives you a grand opportunity for reducing and redistributing of weight.

• • •

As if all this were not enough to crowd into one short hour, there is a needle-shower and a hand massage given by a competent masseuse. If you don't emerge from all this a complete beauty, then there is no hope for you.

All these features are included in the price of one treatment. We almost forgot to mention that you get a physical examination free as well. The salon is under the personal direction of a physician, and a course of twelve treatments takes about six weeks. You lose on an average of three pounds a week—or about 18 to 20 pounds for the entire course. If you prefer you can take a course of only five treatments.

• • •

Treatments are by appointment only, up to 9 p. m. and a convenient budget system has been arranged for the business girl.

If you, too, think that it will be a good idea to keep both slim and fit, write to the Beauty Editor, Boston Evening American, for the name of this reconditioning salon. Full particulars including the price of the treatments will be sent to you. A stamped, self-addressed envelope is the only requirement for a personal reply.

THEATER MANNERS

GOOD MANNERS MAKE REAL CHARM

When you go to the theater do you sometimes feel as though you were on parade? Well, you are! So it's a good idea to mind the p's and q's of etiquette.

For example: A woman should precede her escort down the aisle—provided the tickets have been given to an usher who is leading the way. If the ushers are busy, the man may find his own seats, leading the way down the aisle, then standing aside to let his companion enter first. The woman takes the inside seat. If the newcomers must pass before people already seated, they should face the stage in doing so. It helps to soften the inconvenience caused if they say "I'm sorry!" as they go along. If those seated rise to let the newcomers pass more easily, the latter should by all means say "Thank you very much!"

Such rules of good manners mark the well-bred movie-is also. At both the theater and the movie, the whisper is in better taste than the spoken word—at least while the show is on. If someone in your vicinity should take to reading caption aloud, or recounting personal adventures, you are justified in speaking to the usher, or even if a well-mannered way, to the offender himself. "I'm sorry to interrupt you, but I can't hear while you're talking," would strike just about the right note. FLANNEL once called up visions of old fashioned nighties or a sore throat—but no longer. Flannel is the up-to-date medium for smart tailored dresses, in cloudy pastels or sharp dark tones, which gallivant southward or whip around town with complete aplomb. Flannel goes glamorous in a very dramatic way in the stark white cafe dress which has a mammoth collar of lacquered black chiffon.

BRIDGE SACRIFICES

By JOSEPHINE CULBERTSON

When the microscopic eye of Duplicate competition is brought to bear on a Bridge hand, the most amazingly divergent lines of play appear out of the most innocent-appearing card combinations.

On the hand below, for instance, at nearly every table North and South were pushed to five-hearts by East-West combinations who bid four spades as a sacrifice.

South, Dealer.
North and South vulnerable.

	♠9 ♡KJ75 ♢A843 ♣A954
♠AJ1054 ♡96 ♢Q95 ♣83	North West East South	♠KQ7632 ♡104 ♢K6 ♣J72
	♠8 ♡AQ832 ♢1072 ♣KQ106

The bidding followed similar channels at all the tables. South opened with a heart, West overcalled with a spade, and practically all Norths bid four hearts.

No East was sufficiently overconservative to refrain from bidding four spades, and when this bid was passed around to North, at all tables but one the North player went to five hearts rather than double non-vulnerable opponents.

The final contract usually remained at five hearts undoubled.

West, after his partner's support, opened the Ace of spades and then at most of the tables, after receiving the deuce from his partner, shifted to the diamond Queen.

The declarer went up with the Ace in dummy and I am happy to report that all the East players but one hand had the sense to drop the King. Some of them foresaw the possible strip and throwing play, and knowing that they needed two diamond tricks to defeat the contract, dropped the diamond King as the only hope of unblocking the suit.

Other East players dropped the King without being particularly farsighted, merely because they knew that their partners would not have led a Queen without at least the Jack and nine underneath.

Of course, where the East player did not unblock the diamond suit South was able to fulfill his contract. He drew the outstanding trumps and then ran three rounds of clubs.

He now led a diamond, and the careless East who did not unblock had to pay for their sins. They were forced to lead a spade, which the declarer trumped in dummy while he discarded his other losing diamond, thus fulfilling the contract.

At one table East, for some reason or other, did not shift to diamonds at Trick 2 but led the club eight. This gave the declarer a better chance to get away with the subsequent forced-lead play.

The club lead was won in the declarer's hand and a low diamond immediately led at Trick 3, and the Ace played from dummy.

FASHION FLASHES

THE SANDS of Bermuda inspired a grand new color. Bermuda beige—a warm golden sand color—invites an orgy of buying. Dresses of this new color in thin wool or matelasse crepe snap up the dark winter coat. It's a fashion with a future, for Bermuda beige blends amiably with any of the new spring colors. A poke bonnet, destined to be the hat of the hour, of hunter green straw, green sandals and matching gloves and bag would be particularly effective accessories.

• • •

THE "EYES" have it—for eyelets are the newest form of decoration on spring shoes. Metal eyelets, gaily enameled, form a daisy motif on a pair of blue kidskin ties, while an airflow effect is created by rows of beige eyelets which curve from toe to heel on brown kid oxfords. There is an accessory group trimmed in this new manner of red kid sandals banded with shiny black metal eyelets, which are repeated on a matching bag, and on a red crepe collar and cuff set.

Pencil Retouched Gray Hair

Question—Can you tell me whether salt glow treatments for the hair check premature grayness? I am only 22 years of age, but my hair is already quite gray at the temples. Can you suggest a remedy?

Dolly L., Woonsocket, R. I.

Answer—Salt glow treatments are often used in checking premature gray hair. They are also excellent for correcting an oily scalp condition. They may be used as frequently as every ten days or two weeks and should be followed by a regular shampoo. There is a good retouch pencil on the market for touching up white or gray hair. It looks like a huge crayon and has an inch wide part. It is not a dye and is quite harmless to use. To obtain the salt glow treatment to be made at home and the name of the retouch pencil, write to the Beauty Editor, Boston Evening American, Boston, enclosing a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

LOVE DENIED

By Louise Long and Ethel Doherty

CHAPTER VI

Summoning all her tact, Mrs. Standring launched abruptly into a bright account of Brooks's and Morton's preparations for their home-coming.

During the recital Sharlene slipped away to the telephone. When she returned her eyes looked like dewy brown pansies.

"I've just called up Kent. He's on his way out."

Stuart rose precipitately.

"No, no, you mustn't go. I promised him you'd be here to meet him."

"As you wish, Sharlene," very low.

"Do I look all right, mother? Should I change? This old thing—"

"It was good enough for Stuart," remarked her mother drily.

"Oh, well, Stuart" she looked at him affectionately. "He's used to me—any old way. I don't have to be glamorous to him.

"But you are—glamorous—to me." He tried to keep his voice steady, but it wobbled at the end.

"Thank you, Stuart," Sharlene said, carelessly accepting the tribute, and went into the hall to look critically at herself in the mirror.

Stuart bent over Mrs. Standring. "Is it—serious, this time, Emily?"

"Yes. She's never been like this before. It's always been the other way around. She has received—graciously enough, but you know what I mean. This time she's giving—prodigally. She's madly in love for the first time in her life."

It was cruel—but she thought it was better for the knife to cut clean and be done with it.

After a while they heard the purr of a motor which stopped suddenly, and the sound of an impatient horn came from down the hill.

"How stupid of me!" Stuart exclaimed, remembering. "I hopped out of Mr. Jingle before I got to the porte-cochere and left him standing square in the driveway."

He hurried through the house to the side entrance, followed by Sharlene.

Several yards down the driveway, a sleek limousine had halted behind Mr. Jingle who stood with legs [illegible] impatiently barricading the way. [illegible] fretters. The chauffeur was openly insulted, but the smartly-groomed young man who leaned from the window was grinning appreciatively.

Stuart ran quickly to his car and hastily started it with a roar and a puff of black smoke to the rear. Then he drove ahead and parked at one side where the drive widened. The limousine rolled smoothly up to the door.

After New 'Plane

When Stuart came back down the driveway, Sharlene was in the young man's arms. The sun broke through the thinning fog just then and limned their figures with bright gold. She pulled away and as she introduced them, Stuart saw that Kent Damerell was an exceedingly good-looking young man—slender, and just about Sharlene's height.

He had an infectious smile and there was an exciting air about him. The grasp of his hand was energetic, the glance of his eyes keen and penetrating. Stuart remembered having heard that he was a great sportsman, and he looked the part.

"Sorry you had to bother to get your car out of the way, Mr. Pennington—"

"Don't dignify Mr. Jingle by calling him a 'car.' I present his apologies. He wouldn't apologize himself—he just lives to affront limousines. I got him tenth hand and somewhere along the line I feel sure he had a Bolshevik owner—"

"The one who painted his wheels red," laughed Sharlene.

"I got his Shanghai gesture—from the exhaust pipe," said Kent with a grin.

They went indoors and found Mrs. Standring.

"Hello, Kent. Have you had time to get the desert washed off already?"

"Time! You should see what I've accomplished since I left you last night. I found out that Boehnig and Fairchild and Osnam are in town with their ships. It's the nucleuse of an air meet! I'm going over to the factory in Glendale today and grab out a model—"

"You're not going to buy another plane!" protested Mrs. Standring.

"Probably. At any rate, I'm going to try this one out. Want to try one, too, Sharlene?"

"Rather!" she cried, her eyes sparkling. "I'm dying to get my own hands on the controls. I've been mixed too much on this trip. It's stupid! Oh, Stuart," she turned to him instinctively, "I wish you liked to fly. It's such fun to point her nose up and up to the sun and climb until the earth's a mere nothing—"

Damerell broke in, eager to recapture her attention.

"Wait till you see this special model, Sharlene. She'll climb, and she's got speed and endurance too—"

They went on and on. All the careless, easy talk of airplanes, of spending thousands on them, of driving them recklessly through the ether—it was all beyond Stuart whose flights were never physical flights.

As a matter of fact, he soared far beyond them into the mystery of men's pain and exultation, into the timelessness of suffering and the hope of peace—but his feet stayed always on the ground.

"Sportsmanship"

He sat now, very quiet, feeling his own pain begin to manifest itself through the numbness caused by Sharlene's abrupt announcement. He did not become aware of their further conversation until he heard Kent saying emphatically.

"... and I told him it wasn't the sporting thing to do! Better never have any competitive sports if people can't play square—"

Sportsmanship That was the keynote of the man. Stuart was glad it was so, since Sharlene had chosen him. It was a dependable quality . . .

"Of course," Kent went on, "I don't enter games myself to lose—it never occurs to me that I'll do anything but win!" He laughed and Sharlene laughed with him.

"But," said Stuart slowly "you do lose sometimes, don't you."

Kent surveyed the other man keenly and then said decisively: "Not for long; I may lose for a while, but I never give up till I win."

"And then?" asked Stuart

"Then" Why, on with the next! One never runs out of games."

They all laughed. What a zest for living, Stuart thought. But it would take a lot of money to pursue every game to the end; Fortunately the man was rich, he had a fortune equal to Sharlene's.

A bird of her own plumage. Surely a man of this type could never bring her to earth with a crumpled wing—the thing Stuart had feared for her bright, untrammeled spirit. They would soar together.

Julie was making herself a dress. She had gone down town, after Stuart had taken his joyous departure for Beverly Hills that morning, to pay the instillment due on the fur coat. But first she had gone in to Robinson's Month-End-Sale which she attended with her usual fervor, it being an ever-recurring ritual with her whether she had any money or not.

Shrimp and Cucumbers

One of the best salads is made of shrimp and cucumbers. Break sufficient seasoned cooked shrimp into small pieces to fill a large cup and have a small cucumber thoroughly chilled on ice. Do not peel the cucumber (the green rind is edible and pretty), cut in medium slices and then cut each slice in quarters. Mix with the shrimp and add one coarsely chopped hard-cooked egg, six peeled and chopped radishes and two tablespoons of minced chives and cress. Moisten with Russian dressing.

Relish YOUR Food

By MARTHA LEE

DO YOU relish your food in both meanings of the word?

That is, to explain this weak attempt at word-play, do you eat with gusto or "relish" and also serve yourself some of those appetizing tidbits known as "relishes"?

Tart and spicy relishes are usually most popular, but the sweet ones are delicious with meat and fowl. The only rule is that the relish be in direct contrast to the food it accompanies, in flavor, color and texture.

RELISH SUGGESTIONS

Celery curls are among the more usual relishes or celery stuffed with a mixture of cream cheese, Roquefort cheese and a little onion.

Pickled beets (try adding hard boiled eggs to the beet pickles) are another favorite. Crisp cucumber slices or strips, pickled in French dressing are old timers and olives, radishes pearl onions, tomatoes and pickles are on everybody's list. Crystallized ginger (every try it [illegible] salted nuts and stuffed dates are dessert relishes and sauce of cranberries or apples as relish and dessert in one.

Adele Garrison's Love Serial

CHAPTER 216

AS I MADE my low-voiced plea to Katherine to permit Edith Fairfax to stay in the library, where they had carried Dicky, Edith straightened herself from her drooping posture and faced me with eyes that flamed almost insanely.

"I'll take no largesse from you," she said venomously. "I have as much right here as you have. More, for my heart all belongs to him, while at least half of the things you call yours belong to—"

She did not finish the sentence, at least not in my hearing or Dicky's, if, indeed he possessed consciousness enough to hear her. With a quick [illegible] unbelievable for [illegible] stature and bulk, Hiram Underwood had got a hand over her mouth while with [illegible] arm he had lifted her and carried her out of the room before she could possibly know what had happened to her.

I'm more sorry than I can tell you," Lolita said with a contrite glance at Katherine and [illegible] "I didn't [illegible] Harry was [illegible] for Dicky to stay, prompted [illegible] to be quiet, that when Madea nodded her consent to me, I stopped pulling at the lady. But if I had guessed she was going to throw any spasm like this—" She spread her hands expressively.

Her voice was so low that it did not seem possible Dicky could have heard it, yet it was his voice weak, halting, but holding [illegible]—could I believe my ears?—faint amusement, which [illegible] was [illegible] some spasm!" he said. How [illegible] of [illegible]? Shall we go [illegible] up the misinformation [illegible] I'll admit, I'll agree [illegible] that [illegible] version that Dicky [illegible] heart [illegible] other being given to somebody Edith didn't get a chance to name, but [illegible] and I can guess, if you'll discover for nothing her spiel about me."

Dare I answer him," I asked. "If you make it [illegible]" she said, after a moment looking up.

I ventured to his side for the first time, and closed my hand over the one which feebly moved to greet me.

"I'll say, or do or believe anything you want me to, sweetheart." I told him. "There's only one thing that matters to me, and that is that you're living.

You'll also stop talking, both of you." Katherine said in kindly but firm tones. "I'll relieve both of your alleged minds by telling you that I've changed my mind about you since you were brought in here. I'm not sure that you deserved a doctor now, but I prefer to have one; for as you know, a good nurse never diagnoses or prescribes."

SENSATIONAL NEW BREAD ANNOUNCED IN BOSTON TODAY

This young lady says that Countryside Bread is delicious and that her mother said that she can have all she wants because it's only 9 cents at Economy Grocery Stores.

New Long Loaf Acclaimed Greatest Bread Value Ever Offered at Economy Grocery Stores

What is probably the greatest bread news ever published, comes in the announcement just released by the Economy Grocery Stores. It took several months of sampling, analyzing, testing, and retesting hundreds of loaves of bread to determine the recipe for this masterpiece long loaf.

In announcing the new Countryside Long Loaf, the executives do so with the assurance that this is the finest bread obtainable at nine cents.

This announcement does not come as a surprise to those who know how painstakingly and thoroughly everything is done at Economy Grocery Stores. Interviewed on the eve of the announcement, an Economy Store executive said: "I feel Countryside Long Loaf is more delicious than any loaf we know of at nine cents. You should see how much milk and nourishing quality ingredients go into each loaf. Do you know that there are 24 slices in this long loaf, more slices than in any other bread at the price? Just look at how firm, and smooth, and uniform is the texture of each slice—and wait until you toast it—what a golden treat!"

The Countryside Long Loaf offered for sale now in the Economy Grocery Stores is meeting with instant approval. Mothers are pleased with the nine cent price, of course, but were unusually enthusiastic about the way the children acclaimed this new bread.

Economy Grocery Store managers report immediate response at all Economy Grocery Stores and commented on the fact that the public is quick to sense a real value.

It has always been the policy of the Economy Grocery Stores to sell only quality foods—quality which is second to none. This new Countryside Long Loaf is another instance of Economy's modern attitude that no effort is too great to bring to the Economy Store customer uncancelled foods at lowest possible prices. Economy Grocery Stores invite the housewives of New England to try the new Long Loaf and to make their own comparisons at the price.

ECONOMY ANNOUNCES SIX POINTS OF SUPERIORITY

There are six outstanding features associated with the Countryside Long Loaf. 1—We believe it to be the finest loaf for the money. 2—It is chock full of milk. 3—It has 24 slices—more than any other loaf at the price on the market. 4—It weighs twenty ounces. 5—Its texture is smooth, firm, and uniform. 6—Only first-class nourishing ingredients are used in its baking.

BRIDESMAID BOUQUETS

Bride Provides Flowers

By MRS. BEECKMAN

Dear Mrs. Beeckman

1. I am going to be a bridesmaid next month, and I would like to know who pays for the dress and flowers?

2. Is it proper to give the bride her gift before the wedding?

M

1 The maid of honor and the bridesmaids pay for their own costumes. It is very exceptional for the bride to pay for the costumes of her attendants. However, sometimes she presents her attendants with some detail of their costumes, their hats, for instance.

Usually the family of the bride or the bride herself provides the flowers for the attendants. The flowers are carefully planned, of course, to harmonize with the color-scheme for the wedding. Sometimes the groom asks for the privilege of presenting the flowers to the bridal attendants, and, if he sends the flowers, he and the bride usually go together to the florist's to choose the flowers.

2. Yes. The wedding gift is sent to the bride well before the date set for the wedding, two weeks or ten days before, if possible.

GANG Deaths Spurs U.S. HUNT

THIRD BARKER, KARPIS SOUGHT

By Associated Press

Washington, Jan. 17. The government's challenge to organized crime led Department of Justice agents on the trail today of two leaders of a kidnap-robber gang whose arrest was believed to be imminent.

Spurred by the slaying in Florida yesterday of Kate Barker and her son, Fred, operatives were reported to be closing in on another son Arthur (Doc) Barker and Alvin Karpis, outstanding on the country's list of public enemies.

The latter two have been named as head men of the ring responsible for the abduction a year ago of Edward G. Bremer, wealthy St. Paul resident, who was ransomed for $200,000.

"Ma" Barker also was called a member, as was her son Fred.

In the big new granite building on Pennsylvania avenue where the Justice Department a Bureau of Investigation directs the government's war on crime officials said the case was "hot."

Beyond that they persisted in silence.

To rumors that both "Doc" Barker and Karpis already were under arrest came the familiar grim answer, No comment.

Barker is another former convict who was paroled, permitting him to re-enter a life of crime.

"Ma" Barker Seemed Refined, Motherly

By Universal Service

Miami, Fla., Jan. 17.—Mrs. Kate "Ma" Barker, gray-haired mother who was the brains of a kidnap and kill ring led by her two sons, one of them a wolf hunted in Florida by federal agents, was pictured as a refined, motherly woman by the woman who rented the Barker cabin at Lake Weir.

The Barkers rented the home of Carson Bradford, president of the Ocala Kennel Club, it was learned through Joseph Adams, manager of the club, Adams said:

"They stayed in the hotel here for some time, and she seemed such a nice, quiet, refined old lady that I frequently sent flowers to her room.

"The man, who seemed about 40, registered under the name of J. C. Blackburn."

RICKENBACKER BATTLES STORM

By Universal Service

Washington, Jan. 17—A cracked oil tank and a snowstorm broke up Captain Rickenbacker's attempt to make a dawn-to-dusk round trip flight between New Orleans and New York.

Despite the mishap, which forced the flier to put back to Washington, while speeding South on the return leg at a 200-mile an hour clip, he hung up a new one-way transport speed record between the two cities on his northbound flight.

His time was 7 hours and 3 minutes, 3½ hours under the old mark.

In the trip up from New Orleans Rickenbacker had three passengers and a "stowaway" aboard his twin-motored Douglas transport plane. The passengers were Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, widow of the war-time president; Mrs. Eugene Meyer, wife of a Washington publisher, and Mrs. Rickenbacker.

The "stowaway" was Miss Marie Louise Reynolds, 17-year old Loyola University journalism co-ed, who had gone to Shushan airport at New Orleans to interview the air ace and his passengers.

She was still aboard when the final was given for the take-off of Rickenbacker, with the approval of Mrs. Wilson and the other passengers, invited her to go along. She did.

Treasury officials said plans for canvassing the problem are being considered, but no committee has been appointed and no announcement of program can be made.

RED FINGER-NAILS AROUSE TEACHER

GOLDEN LIPS, EARS SUGGESTED

By Universal Service

Providence, R. I., Jan. 17—Women "stain their finger-nails in such a manner that they resemble the claws of a tiger ripping up sheep" because they are more interested in decorating themselves than in looking youthful.

This theory was advanced by Prof. Sor Curt J. Ducasse of Brown University, speaking on "The Philosophy of Cosmetics" before the Rhode Island Philosophical Society. Professor Ducasse said

"If women were fully conscious of the decorative use of cosmetics they would then make much fuller use than they do of the resources actually at their disposal.

"If the reason for staining the finger nails is to provide decorative spots of bright color, why not green or blue, or golden finger nails, and why not likewise green, or blue, or golden lips, eyebrows, cheeks or ears?

"Especially with the addition of colored wigs to match, some wonderful effects could undoubtedly be achieved."

The reason behind the use of any makeup is to become more fascinating to others, Professor Ducasse stated. Cosmetics can be helpful in imitating youthful complexions.

Rainbow pleasing, use of false eyebrows like beauty-patches and other tricks are all for decoration and not for youth-illusion.

Another "brain trust" is expected to be an important part of Lloyd George's plan.

This Is Life
ROBERT E. ROGERS

The combination of Robert and Herrick, the name of the new Secretary of the Virgin Islands, is by now a classic one.

Ever since the Cavalier parson who wrote "Night Piece to Julia" and "Gather Ye Rosebuds While Ye May" immortalized it, many others of little poetic talent have usurped it.

Boston's late Robert Herrick, for instance, an admirable person but better known as a banker and an oarsman than a divine or a rhymster.

Robert E. Rogers

But the Robert Herrick who has just grabbed a plane and taken off for the Virgin Islands has done almost as much for the name in modern letters as did the original Robert in the days of Charles I.

Perhaps that is why he got the job. Perhaps Mr. Roosevelt has let it be known to Mr. Ickes that he is getting tired of the kind of Democrat that Mr. Farley is boosting into public office.

Possibly he remembers that under the old dispensation it was quite the thing to appoint men of letters to important and not so important diplomatic and consular posts.

Washington Irving to Spain, for instance, followed by James Russell Lowell, and our present day historian Claude Bowers.

Hawthorne, consul to Liverpool and Rome; Howells, consul to Venice; James Russell Lowell, Whitelaw Reid, Walter Hines Page, all ambassadors to London.

The Literary President

Woodrow Wilson was the literary President par excellence. He sent Thomas Nelson Page to Rome, the other Page to London, Brant Whitlock to Belgium, and Henry Van Dyke to The Hague.

Later Richard Washburn Child went to Rome. And so on. The glorious company of the Literati will welcome the new Herrick to the old tradition.

Perhaps the appointment will give him solace for a lifelong disappointment.

In the middle years of the first decade of this century, in the muckraking era, Robert Herrick, Harvard graduate and professor of English at Chicago University, wrote a number of honest, sincere, tragic or ironic novels about the American scene, as looked at through a critical eye.

Novels like "An American Citizen," "The Common Lot," "Together," Clark's Field" (a story of Allston), and others.

They had a good deal to say about America from the sharply critical point of view of the progressive liberals of that day.

They Didn't Catch On

But the public did not catch on. They ate up Winston Churchill and Ernest Poole and David Graham Phillips, who wrote "The Rise and Fall of Susan Lennox," men who could tell a good story and also had some convictions about what was going on about us.

But they didn't read Robert Herrick—much. He tended to withdraw into himself. For seven or eight years he published little new.

Then he determinedly came out of retirement, tried a novel or two, but again without much popular success.

The one work of his which has probably been read by more readers than any other is a long short story called "The Master of the Inn," a story laid in the woods, where a wise and gentle old physician heals people who are all kinked up, by the simple, natural methods of a born healer.

That book, I suspect, will remain Robert Herrick's contribution to the literature of his country, while his more ambitious sociological studies in fiction gather dust in the Carnegie Libraries.

Handsomest of Them All

I remember meeting him occasionally at anniversary dinners of the old Harvard Monthly, founded in the 'eighties by literary undergraduates.

He would be sitting with George Pierce Baker and Norman Hapgood and William Vaughan Moody and Georges Santayana. Herrick would be the handsomest of them all.

Always went the whole dog in evening dress, the white tie and weskit.

Tall and erect in his chair, his handsome, aquiline face shining pink and white, chin raised, nose tilted even downcast; handsome, distant, unresponsive—jelly regular, splendidly null.

One admired him, but had no materials for any other emotion about him. Perhaps that is why he was not widely read by the American public, that rather prefers heart to brain.

It will be interesting to see whether he is popular in the Virgin Islands.

B. U. CONFERENCE

'High Class,' Says Pastor of Dance

'Part of Church'

'FAN GIRL" IS DEFENDED BY REV. CUTBILL

Speaking of E R A Fan Dancer Aleta Ray who, he insists "out-sa Hies Sally Rand," the Rev. Harold Cutbill, in whose Third Religious Society Unitarian Church auditorium of Dorchester she will dance tomorrow evening, had this to say today:

"High-class dancing should be as vital a part of the living church as high-class preaching.

"There should be nothing startling in the announcement that Miss Ray will perform a semi-fan dance in my church auditorium.

"Well informed people know that dancing has long been a means of religious expression.

"Since the days of the early Greeks, dancing has been used at one time or another by nearly all churches in their religious ceremonies.

"Recently, a Universalist church in Waltham and a Congregationalist church in Boston sponsored church entertainments featuring dancing.

"In both instances, the dancing was slow-moving and did not approach Miss Ray's performance.

"Her contribution to tomorrow night's entertainment will initiate a community campaign of freedom and expansion planned to encourage wholesome freedom for members of my congregation.

"The leisure provided by NRA has revealed how pitifully empty of wholesome diversion most lives are.

"I feel that my work as a minister puts upon me the responsibility of showing people how to live a happy as well as a good life."

Tomorrow night's performance as well as those to follow, will be free to all, the Rev. Cutbill, one-time famous B. U. mile runner, said today.

Form to the right and don't crowd, good people.

Here are a few fair landlubbers in their nautical costumes. Miss Marjorie Leighton is a South Sea Islander, Miss Lynne Wyeth is garbed as a blood-thirsty pirate; Miss Mary Altimas, a very salty sailor; Miss Janet Wyeth, a ship's officer; Miss Marjorie Kelly, an entrancing mermaid; Miss Beatrice White, an other fetching tar, and Miss Gertrude Powers, a beachcomber.

GIRLS' PHYSIQUE GETS ATTENTION

CALLED VITAL IN BUSINESS

Boston girls, some 300 of them, heard a lecturer come all the way from New York to tell them something most of them already knew.

It was "that business men are paying a good deal of attention to a girl's physique."

Anyhow, Miss Frances Maule author and business woman, who gave the lecture at the Boston Y. W. C. A., went into details.

Miss Maule started out by admitting that some of the audience must have found out by experience the principle she was enunciating. That brought a few confirmatory giggles.

She decided, however, it was necessary to explain for the benefit of those who were still in the dark. So she said:

"Personality is generally made up of several different items—a girl's voice, her hair, her teeth—all of which make that mysterious something which attracts persons."

But, the lecturer pointed out, a fine physique should be cultivated. A girl's chest should be up, her shoulders thrown back. Miss Maule said:

"Those of you who are already engaged in business careers must have already found out that business men are paying a great deal of attention to a girl's physique.

"Boston girls have an advantage in the fact that they talk with an accent, or are supposed to. Every girl should practice a cultivated accent."

The speaker also advised the girls to have a "rich personal experience." She advised dancing all night on rare occasions.

The "inner life must be satisfied" she said, because that keeps a girl vibrant and ready for work.

GOWN SAVES WOMAN FROM DROWNING

Mrs. Annie E. Russell, 58, of Concord street, Newton Lower Falls, is thankful today that she wears heavy clothing.

While crossing the Boston & Albany railroad trestle, off Concord street, she slipped on the icy ties and plunged 5 feet into the frigid waters of the Charles river.

Her heavy clothing buoyed her up until rescuers, responding to her screams, managed to get her ashore.

She was taken to the Newton Hospital and treated for cold and amersion. Her condition is good, according to hospital authorities. Mrs. Russell is a widow, and is housekeeper for James F. Monroe, Newton police officer.

THREATS ON EVERETT POLICE BARED

Members of the new Everett police liquor and vice squad have been informed about gang plans to kill them, the squad leader, Sergeant Felix A. Dumas, said today.

The other members of the squad are Inspectors James J. O'Donnell and Daniel B. Cahill.

The squad today arrested Howard M. Packer, of Marlborough street, Chelsea, on a charge of promoting a lottery.

Packer is alleged to have sold a number pool ticket to a member of the squad. He will be arraigned tomorrow.

Working under direct orders of Mayor James A. Roche, the squad has succeeded in closing more than 30 kitchen bar rooms.

Mayor Roche said he is planning to call a conference of clergy in an effort to enlist their aid in stamping out crime.

MIL PRICE Boost Delayed

A report indicating that the milk price will not be boosted was received here today. The report stated that Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, may not approve the increase in the price paid to farmers shipping milk to Greater Boston markets.

NORFOLK WORK Near Completion

Two new dormitories at Norfolk prison colony will be completed next month or early in March, prison officials announced today.

Completion, according to present plans, will mean the transfer of about 100 prisoners from crowded state prison in Charlestown and about 200 from Concord Reformatory.

DOOMED Man May TALK

SCARNICI HAS CRIME SECRET

"Don't throw that switch—I'll talk to Mitchell!"

If, in the Sing Sing death house tonight, Leonard Scarnici, bandit, kidnaper, murderer, should utter those words—

For a grizzled, white-haired, retired Boston police inspector, John F. Mitchell, it would be an unrivalled triumph after five bitter years of defeat.

It would solve a western Massachusetts crime—the burial alive of Frank "Jazz" Wilson—that horrified New England in 1930.

Mitchell, no longer an officer of the law, clung grimly to his trail even today while but a few hours remained before Scarnici took the last long walk.

For four years Mitchell has been trying to solve the Wilson slaying "on his own."

Ready for Death

Last night, as the New York gangster Scarnici was preparing for death, he turned down a plea from Mitchell that he talk with him. But it was only one more setback for the ex-inspector.

He hasn't given up and he won't until the generators whirr and the bolts flash that signal the death-dealing cuddlet is pulsing through Scarnici's body tonight.

Mitchell had hope, just because the doomed man refused to see him. Hitherto, Scarnici readily talked to him, only sealing his lips when the Wilson slaying was mentioned.

Feared to Weaken

The ex-Boston inspector thought that the time he was refused his visit because the gangster feared he might weaken.

Scarnici knows who killed Wilson, Mitchell is certain. He may have ordered the man slain himself. The murder was in Agawam, outcome of a bootlegging feud.

Scarnici is dying for the slaying of a detective in a New York bank robbery. He had been released from kidnaping charges so that he might pay for this crime.

The condemned man and seven of his gang were arrested as the kidnapers of John J. O'Connell, Jr., son of an Albany Democratic leader.

POLICE TO OBEY Old School Bell

The old school bell, which Boston policemen obeyed in their youth will again ring out when the Boston Police School re-opens for class instructions on Monday, according to Superintendent Martin H. King.

Before a lecture a bell will be rung and all doors will be closed and locked thus barring tardy officers. The tardy ones will be forced to attend another session of that class during the same week as long as it does not interfere with their duty.

O. O. McINTYRE
NEW YORK
Day By Day

New York, Jan. 17—Those blankets of pea soup fog that settle over the New York harbor once or twice a year not only paralyze shipping, but cost at low estimate a million dollars a day. Not a craft can move and nothing can be done save patiently to wait.

Great ocean liners ten feet apart are totally obscured. And the doleful croak of the fog horns adds to the despair. Sometimes even deck walkers, trying to relieve the tedium, bump into each other and have to give it up.

For the captain and crew it means no sleep.

O. O. McIntyre

The captain must remain on the bridge in such emergencies. Even his coffee is brought. The most enduring pall lasted three days and nights. Generally it begins to lift in 24 hours. While some fogs can be detected in advance, many spread in ten minutes.

A little progress has been made by electrified spray, but there are fogs that cannot be pierced. Great scientists have been experimenting for years. It is an inscrutable secret that Nature refuses to yield. No invention would bring a larger fortune than a fog dissipater.

Sophie Tucker a 'Natural'

Not many in the theatrical world have rolled up so much publicity during the year as Sophie Tucker. The suspicioning is, of course, she has a high-powered bunch of hired praisers. The truth is the buoyant Sophie is "a natural" for the feature writers.

Her vitality in proclaiming herself "last of the red hot mamas" unlimbers typewriters. But chiefly it's a phase of Americanism difficult to fathom i. e. The story that La Tucker is like that with the royalty crowd.

Fright wig note: Percy Crosby and an artist friend were waiting for a table in a restaurant some weeks ago. During the interlude the friend recalled a dancer of some years ago, but neither could recall her name.

After a ponder it came to the friend in sudden blurt. As he exclaimed it, someone turned in, passing as though being called. It was the dancer.

Clings to Paris Attic

Newspaper columnists have their moments of astonishment, too. He came around today shyly grateful. At 71, he had never had his name in print until it appeared here.

Like a chorus full of years, he made a great deal of a simple joy. One felt like rushing to the typewriter and zinging out a column ode to his gratitude.

Richard le Gallienne, the American poet, clings to his Paris attic. The dollar drop and the evacuation by his countrymen do not move him. Every afternoon he occupies a chair on a terrasse of a dingy little cafe in the equally dingy Rue Croissant.

His hair has grown almost snow white. He turns out a sonnet now then or an article. But mostly he sits dreaming, as poets should.

Rubber-Tired Milk Wagons

Park Avenue at the dinner hour was recently regaled with a closeup of the new rubber tired milk wagon that has been shorn of its horrendous slippity-bang.

A three-block-long cavalcade of the wagons brought debutantes in milkmaid costumes to a charity affair at a fashionable Inn. As a rule the milk wagon is seen only by the early morning hiccuper returning home.

And the unusual spectacle so early proved such an attraction that traffic had to be diverted and police lines formed. One of the larger milk companies is also planning rubber tipped milk cans that will soften the usual jangle as they jounce the curb.

Thingumabobs: Jed Harris is now shaving again . . . Jim Tully often cooks a hobo's prime repast, Mulligan stew, for his friends . . . Al Jolson, during his minstrel days, played every small town, more than 10,000, in America . . . J. P. Morgan likes sorghum and johnny cakes . . . Thomas W. Lawson wrote his frenzied finance articles for Everybody's for nothing and paid for the newspaper advertising . . . Lord Dunsany was a rubber band saver . . . District Attorney Jerome always mingled with newspapermen on his nights out . . . Charles Winninger gave up an ice rad-o job for a stage uncertainty because he loves the footlights . . .

He came rather sheepishly into a restaurant behind a brightly rouged and over-dressed chorus girl for whom he had deserted a long-faithful wife.

"That's Jack," murmured Lou Holtz, "and his mess of pottage."

BILLS Ask Probe on FIN. COM.

ROLAND OPENS SENATE MOVE

Strong support of Governor Curley's efforts to rebuild the Boston Finance Commission developed in the Legislature today.

In the turbulent wake of the removal of Commissioners Charles M. Storey and Joseph J. Donahue, Democrats filed two orders for a complete investigation of the commission's activities.

The orders were filed jointly in Senate and House by Senator James Scanlan, Somerville, and Representative Roland D. Sawyer, Ware.

Another order called for investigation of land taking settlements in the Ware-Swift river water supply project during Governor Ely's administration.

Power to Recommend

The Finance Commission orders call for appointment of special committee of the Legislature to investigate into the acts and findings of the commission since September 1, 1931.

The committees would report as to malfeasance, misfeasance or nonfeasance, if any, of commissioners individually, or the commission as a whole.

They would also make recommendations either as to the reorganization or abolition of the commission.

Thus, the Governor's supporters quickly answered yesterday's move of Republican Senator Henry Parkman and Republican Representative Chilton Herter, who filed orders under which a legislative committee would undertake to carry on the commission's investigation of tunnel land takings and the private business of Edmund L. Dolan, former city treasurer.

One other development of significance in the general situation on Beacon Hill was the other bill filed by Sawyer calling for investigation of all land and property takings in connection with the $60,000,000 Ware-Swift River water supply project.

Grant on 'Gangs'

As representative from the district, he said he had been informed that farmers and small property holders had been paid small amounts for what they sacrificed, while speculators and corporations received large settlements.

Dick Grant, radio secretary to Governor Curley, replying to the comment of "gang rule" made by former Lieutenant Governor Gaspar G. Bacon in connection with the removal of Storey, declared that Bacon must be "thinking of the 'State Street Gang' which Governor is cleaning out of the State House as fast as possible."

Grant said:

"If Gaspar Griswold Bacon had waited, like the ground-hog, until Candlemas Day, before emerging from the hole in which the voters buried him last November, nobody would have displayed the slightest interest. Gaspar's prophecies and are about is important as those of the ground-hog."

BLAME LOW SILL FOR DEATH PLUNGE

Margaret Kelley, 6-year-old Roxbury girl, who plunged to her death from a window of her home at 225 Dudley street. A low sill caused the fall, according to relatives.

GIRL DIES AT SAME SILL

WHERE KIN FELL

Low window sills were blamed today for the death of Margaret Kelley, 16, in a 50-foot fall from the window of her home, 225 Dudley street, Roxbury.

The girl fell from the same window out of which her eleven-year-old sister Mary fell about a year ago.

Miss Kelley was alone in the front room just before the fall.

Her family didn't know of the accident but Joseph M. Bailey of Howard avenue and John Fuller of Campbell street, both Roxbury, nearby were hit by the falling girl.

A car was hailed by Bailey and Fuller. Miss Kelley was taken to City Hospital, where doctors pronounced her dead.

Mr. and Mrs. William J. Kelley, parents of the girl, followed the car to the hospital. They had been eating in the kitchen when the girl fell.

Miss Kelley was a student in St. Patrick's parochial high school.

Her parents said she was studying just before the fall.

Democrats Sure to Win Moran Favor

Although the matter is not settled finally, at least ten of the 16 Democrats in the Senate apparently are destined to receive committee chairmanships from President James G. Moran tomorrow. There are 29 regular committees and 40 Senators.

It was because of Moran's promise to use the Democrats fairly that he received the Democratic support which elected him head of the upper chamber.

Senator Donald W. Nicholson of Wareham, Republican, has been picked by President Moran as his floor leader.

Nicholson will thus become the ranking member on rules.

Subject to last-minute changes, Senator Edward C. Carroll of South Boston is slated for the chairmanship of the committee on civil service.

CATINO HELD IN $1000

ON GUN THREAT

Samuel Catino, who was acquitted of killing his benefactor, Miss Alice Porter of West Medford, with poison, was arrested today on a charge of threatening two youths and a girl.

Police say he threatened them with shooting on Alston street, West Medford, near the house he inherited from Miss Porter.

In Malden Court he pleaded not guilty and was released in $1000 for hearing Saturday.

The girl's name was withheld, according to police. Clarence Connors and Arthur Brogan, both of Grace road, West Medford, appeared at police headquarters at 2 a. m., saying:

"We were escorting a young lady home from a bridge party, when this man approaching us and said: 'Keep away from that girl or I'll fill you full of lead.'"

SLAYER KAMINSKI IS

Saved for Month

Alexander Kaminski moved out of the electric chair's shadow today.

For 30 days, at least, the slayer of a Springfield jail guard will await further action of Governor Curley on his plea for clemency.

He first learned today from Warden James L. Hogsett that the death sentence, to be carried out next week, had been stayed for 30 days by the Governor and his council.

He beamed at the warden.

"Well, thanks very much. This gives me some hopes."

Attorneys argue for commutation of Kaminski's death sentence to life imprisonment with a plea that there was no premeditation when he killed Merritt W. Hayden in escaping from Springfield Jail.

The respite was granted after the governor read a memorandum from Judge Nelson F. Brown, who presided at Kaminski's trial.

Girl's Mother Collapses at Death Trial

Auburn, Me., Jan. 17—Mrs. Dora Eslin, mother of the slain Joan Eslin, collapsed in court today as her husband, Fidelis Eslin, described the "bringing up" of Joan, one of 10 children.

As the mother fainted in her chair Willis Boutbiette, 25-year-old crippled taxi driver accused of the slaying, hardly changed expression.

A short time later, the state rested its case.

Last witnesses for the prosecution against Boutbiette, alleged to have made a confession that he shot 17-year-old Joan in a suicide pact, included Deputy Sheriff Eugene Cloutier of Androscoggin County, and Patrolman Antonio Vover of Lewiston.

Deputy Cloutier testified as to his questioning of Boutbiette after the crippled taxi driver had driven to the Lewiston police station with the body of the girl in his car.

Former Patrolman Voyer, who now is an undertaker's assistant, testified to the condition of the girl's clothing, which was admitted in exhibit.

She seeks to show his death was not suicide.

The clergyman testified:

"The bottom of the door, which opened into the living room, was smeared as though a wet rag had been used on it. There were blood stains on both the upper two and lower panels."

TAKING OFFICE

One day in office, the new attorney-general, Paul A. Dever, was called upon today to settle a squabble between the new state auditor, Thomas H. Buckley, and the state racing commission.

Buckley believes his office should have charge. The racing commission believes it should handle the auditing.

LAWYER CLEARED IN "FIXING" CASE

Petition for the disbarment of Stanley W. Wisniouski, of Boston and Chelsea, was dismissed today by Judge Edward P. Pierce of Superior Court. Judge Pierce said:

"In the end I think this respondent is entitled to have a Scotch verdict of not proven, and that his connection with the wrong-doing of Duval is not sufficiently connected."

Duval is Raymond F. Duval, a Revere constable, who gave testimony of alleged jury-fixing before Dunbar F. Carpenter, special commissioner, but changed his testimony in court and said he had been intimidated on the first occasion.

John M. Stanley, counsel for Wisniouski, assailed Duvals testimony.

Junia Mason, Mary Whittemore Among Badminton Leaders

By BETTY ALDEN

THE NEW YORK "SWELLS" of the '80s, who were the first to adopt Badminton in this country, would gaze in bewilderment at the results of the evolution of the costume worn on the courts . . . In their day only the ultra smart "took" to the game and they appeared in action in full dress and top hats . . . Today from the grandstand the spectator marvels at the grace and agility of the sprightly players enjoying all the freedom of action which must have been completely lost in the game as it was first introduced into this country.

MARY WHITTEMORE

Though not a novelty in the social world any more, badminton has become one of the most popular games of the fairer sex . . . Besides being a delightful recreation, the game is perfect for women as it requires plenty of grace, agility, a bit of craftiness and less strength than some of the more energetic sports.

Junia Mason on Team

IF ANY FRIENDS of Junia Mason or Mary Whittemore want to find them the first place to investigate is the Badminton and Tennis Club, one of society's newest organizations, in the Back Bay . . . They are members of the A team of the club, and morning after morning finds them there, diligently practicing or competing in match play with the other teams in the Greater Boston Badminton League . . .

Junia streaks across the court like a flash of lightning in her buttercup yellow shorts and dark green polo shirt, to return a volley to the tall and willowy Mary . . . Many a beginner would do well to take note of Mary's superb carriage and graceful movements on the court . . . and being a southpaw makes her badminton form even more fascinating to watch . . .

When the mercury is hovering close to zero, Mrs. John Cutter of Dedham dons a raspberry-colored sweater over her white "skirt 'n' shirt" outfit before venturing into the unheated area of the courts . . . The trappings of her friend, "Kay" (Mrs. Eldon MacLeod of Westwood), are vivid blue, and they make a bright and conspicuous pair as they rally on the courts before a match game . . .

The ingeniously planned lounge of the Badminton club, which serves both as a gallery and a recreation room for members, is low ceilinged and decorated in orange and black with cream-colored background . . . When we dropped in the other morning Louise Whittemore, debutante daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Wyman Whittemore of Beacon street, and Mrs. William O. Clark of Framingham Center were the fascinated audience of two at the broad windows overlooking the courts where a doubles match was being played . . . It was not long before Mrs. Henry Hubbell and Mrs. John B. Pierce joined them, and when the time came for steaming hot tea to be served the lounge was gay with laughter and friendly chatter . . .

Debs, Here's Your Dartmouth Dance

WHEN A GIRL WANTS to go to Dartmouth Carnival, that's no news . . . BUT . . . when Dartmouth wants a girl, one particular girl, to write her own ticket to Carnival, to become the Carnival Guest, that's NEWS . . . and that's exactly what "The Dartmouth," daily newspaper of the college, is doing in their second annual Duchess of Dartmouth contest. . . .

In the words of The Dartmouth . . . it is all very simple, neat and exciting . . . Any college woman living east of the Mississippi is eligible to compete . . . A Duchess of Dartmouth is wanted and some girl will write a letter whose wit, originality and spirit will take her to Hanover to be the guest of the college for one of the most colorful collegiate events of the year . . . Winter Carnival . . .

The Duchess will be selected on the merits of her letter, limited to 250 words, on "What I Would Expect From a Dartmouth Winter Carnival" . . .

The winner will be crowned Duchess of Dartmouth and will receive a trip to Carnival with all expenses paid and a prominent undergraduate escort to beau her around all weekend . . .

So . . . if any of our aspiring debs are missing for the next few weeks they will probably be found composing letters of wit and originality for the learned scribes of Hanover to pass upon, if not for the free trip, for the thrilling prospect of ascertaining WHO the prominent escort will be and also to keep the royal title in Boston, as the crown went to Deborah Holmes of Waban, last winter . . .

FLOYD GIBBONS' PAGE OF THRILLS AND MYSTERY

'The Killer Elephant'

Hollywood Beast Executed Only After He Slays Trainer

HELLO, EVERYBODY.

Load up your cameras, boys and girls of this adventure club. Here is that thriller behind the scenes that I promised you yesterday. This yarn stars Ike Rosen, our latest club member. But Ike would have given a couple of million dollars to have been left out of the cast of this adventure.

First we go back to the early days of moving pictures—1915 to be exact—when Ike was employed as a technician at the Universal Studios in Hollywood.

Animal pictures were great, in those days, and there was a complete zoo on the lot. The king of that collection of beasts was Charlie, an elephant bought from a circus. Charlie was a good actor, but nobody could handle him except Curley, his personal trainer.

FLOYD GIBBONS

Well, Ike stepped into the dramatic part of the picture when Director Smalley began staging the wedding procession of an Indian prince. It was comedy, and for the parts of the Indian prince and his bride, two actors weighing nearly 400 pounds each, were cast. Ike's job was to build a huge canopied chair in which the prince and princess were to ride in state on the back of Charlie, the elephant.

Ike finished the royal howdah. Workmen tried to budge it and found that it weighed nearly 2000 pounds. Twelve men heaved and struggled to saddle Charlie with the gorgeous structure. Then, 700 pounds of prince and princess went up the ladder.

That's where Charlie took a dislike for more ornaments, Ike put a step ladder against Charlie's side and climbed up. There was Charlie's chance.

He whipped his trunk around, seized Ike by the leg, trumpeted in anger and lifted him for a dash to the ground.

Curley, the trainer sank his curved elephant hook into Charlie's forehead and Ike limped away. That was his first round with his monstrous enemy.

The trainer knew elephants. He knew what to expect in the future, so he warned Ike. "Charlie's going bad," he said. He'll kill you the first chance he gets."

Ike did watch out. But one night a wild chimpanzee cleverly opened his cage and almost killed a keeper. Ike hurried over to devise a lock that the Chimp couldn't open. Charlie's big stall was next door. He sensed Ike's presence and went berserk. He lifted his iron water tub to beat at his chains and the bars around his enclosure. The whole zoo trembled from the elephant's fury. Curley, the trainer, again rushed to the rescue.

■■■■

"For God's sake, Ike, leave this studio if you value your life," Curley said. "Charlie's turned killer. He's out for you. Lucky for you his chains held."

Ike took no more chances. He gave Charlie a wide berth. But one day, when his work called him to a remote part of the movie lot, he rounded a hill and ran smack into Charlie, tethered to an anchor of poles and railroad iron, driven into the ground.

He had no time to turn back. The bull elephant, ears flattened against his head, eyes blazing and his trumpeting echoing from the hills charged.

Rosen was trapped. His only chance was to dive for a shallow gully that separated the movie lot from an Indian Village. He flung himself against the side. The earth was trembling under those plunging feet. Ike only hoped for a quick death.

Then, there was a clank of chains—the groaning of the heavy anchor poles set deep in the ground. Charlie had reached the end of his chain. His head was jerked down. He stumbled, ploughed the earth.

The maddened beast was halted only a few feet from Ike's pitifully shallow hiding place. Rosen could see those bloodshot eyes gleaming with hatred—a lust to kill.

The long trunk slashed out in fury. Ike felt a thud on the side of his head as Charlie grazed him and snatched off his cap.

For a moment big Charlie paused to hurl his enemy's cap beneath his feet and trample it to ribbons. That pause saved Rosen. He was on his feet, running limp and dripping with cold sweat.

But Charlie bided his time. For days he watched quietly. And then, during the making of a spectacular film in a setting of old Jerusalem, Ike crossed the set and came face to face with his old foe.

Once more Charlie charged in an insane desire to crush the man who had tortured him with that huge, 2000-pound saddle in the earlier picture. But this time Ike was in the clear. He ducked to safety. The baffled elephant, once more cheated of his vengeance, turned upon the set.

■■■■

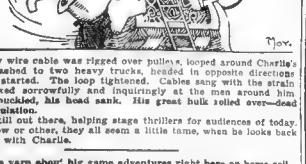
Jerusalem, with all its splendor—thousands of dollars worth of costly settings—crashed into a heap of dust and splinters.

This time Charlie did not quiet down. He was ready to kill anything in sight. Men with long, spiked poles, ripped his hide and jabbed him into helpless submission—but only for a moment.

A few days later he saw Ike in the distance and went into another frenzy. Rosen scurried out of sight but Charlie, thirsting for a kill seized his trainer, Curley, lifted him high into the air, dashed him to earth and then, with his massive forehead ground him into the dust. Curley was killed instantly.

"Killer Elephant!" The words set Hollywood trembling. It was no longer a single foe. It was the life of any human being.

Charlie must die, studio officials ruled. But how? Poison and dynamite were rejected as not sure enough. Ike Rosen's technical skill was enlisted. Despite his narrow escape, he hated to be Charlie's executioner, but many lives were at stake.



A heavy wire cable was rigged over pulleys, looped around Charlie's neck and lashed to two heavy trucks, headed in opposite directions. The trucks started. The loop tightened. Cables sang with the strain. Charlie looked sorrowfully and inquiringly at the men around him. His knees buckled, his head sank. His great bulk rolled over—dead from strangulation.

Ike is still out there, helping stage thrillers for audiences of today. But, somehow or other, they all seem a little tame, when he looks back at his feud with Charlie.

There's a yarn about big game adventures right here on home soil—a soil which is sprouting adventures every day. If it has sprouted one for you, let's have the details, and your picture, right now. Here at the club tomorrow night I am going to relate a gentle little reminiscence of Wallace White, who rode sky-high on a charge of 18,000 pounds of dynamite. And if that doesn't blow your hats off—well, you tell me one.

$10.00 EVERY DAY AND $100.00 EVERY MONTH is what Floyd Gibbons will pay American readers to prove that more thrilling and interesting TRUE adventures happen in YOUR life and in the lives of your friends than anything fiction writers can invent. YESTERDAY'S ANSWERS

Who Said It?

"They also serve who only stand and wait."

This oft-repeated sentence is one of the blind poet, John Milton. It helps to enshrine manana. John Dryden, contemporary poet, added a bit of drama to the idea of patience, saying: "Beware the fury of a patient man." Sir Isaac Newton glorified patience by saying: "What I have done is due to patient thought." And Robert Hall declared: "If knowledge is power, patience is powerful." Benjamin Franklin helped to teach patience, when he wrote: "He that can have patience can have what he will." But the Bible says: "Hope deferred maketh the heart sick."

Words of Wise

The flatterer speaks with a double heart, he has one heart for your face and another from behind your back.—Dr. Randolph Angell.

Fretfulness is the dry grinding of one thing against another. We need to tap the oil of gladness and peace.—A. A. Foeshee.

The moment when you turn into middle age is when you discuss your body ailments and feelings.—Dr. Frank Condon.

Mistakes are the lessons of wisdom. The past has changed. The future is yet in our power.—Hugh White.

The past is a story told. The future may be aglow with gold.—Patrick Henry.

NEW ENGLAND'S GREATEST EVENING NEWSPAPER

BOSTON, THURSDAY, JANUARY 17, 1935

AUSTEN LAKE on

The Equerry, To King Knuckle-Duster

MOST INTERESTING CHARACTER in Max Baer's entourage is not his gay, goofy self. Nor yet his bulky, pituitary-glanded brother. It is Frank Pocassi, the quiet, soft-spoken, collegiate male nurse, who shakes the boys awake, stands off the moochers and sloshes the fighters over or towels them off between rounds.

Austen Lake

Frank has just left Boston, after picking up the left-behind pieces of the recent Madden spectacle. A city-bred boy who had his roots in the tenderloin districts of New York, he somewhere acquired an Oxford polish and the gentle manner of an English waiter.

But don't be fooled. Because Pocassi can button down his eyes, thin his lips and bore you through with cockle-burr words.

He is Baer's deputy manager and trouble shooter, who goes ahead of the champion in his travels to turn on the heat, or drops behind to smooth away some petty larceny claim.

Does the champion's big, nickled bus crumble somebody's fivver fender. Asking price $50,000, including internal injuries; Pocassi's offer, $5 for a mended mudguard; settlement, $15 and a written waiver on further claims.

Does a noisy drunk haunt the hallways, Pocassi snatches him hip and thigh. Does a deserving chiseler wish monetary remembrance for old time's sake, Pocassi delves into his jeans and flakes off a dollar; does an unattached lady wish to renew alleged acquaintance, she is nosed out diplomatically with firm but oily speech.

Bouncer to the world's leading fist fighter? The term "bouncer" is offensive to his nostrils. "Call me equerry, a sort of masculine governess," he advised. "Bouncer smacks of beer tubs, sanded floors and greasy bar tables."

All right, Mr. Frank Pocassi, equerry, man-in-waiting, militant attache of his majesty, Max Adolbert Baer, fisticanus rex.

Dick Harlow's Knack

MOST USEFUL FACULTY to a man in any form of public life is an accurate memory for names, first names, and faces. It implies flattery, induces quick friendship.

To an extraordinary degree, Richard Cresson Harlow, of the Harvard football Harlows, has that trick. It is rising 20 years since I last saw Dick, and then at a distance. He, as the fur-coated Bhudda on Penn State's varsity bench. I, as spavined, battle-pocked fullback for Lafayette.

Oh, yes! There was a day in war-time Paris when a burly, khaki-clad officer ambled down the Boulevarde Poissoniere, his cow-catcher chin splitting the motley crowd of civilians and soldiers.

My leave-mate, a corporal named Mudge—former Lehigh football manager—said, "There goes Dick Harlow." We were dusty and cootie ridden, he was trim and neat. He didn't see us, and we didn't speak.

Yet, when I walked into the Harvard A. A. intending to introduce myself, he was first on the trigger.

"Hello, Duke," said he, mentioning the old schoolboy handle. And he talked an intimate monologue of ancient college scenes and personalities, long grown vague in my own mind.

Don't belittle this trick as an asset to popularity! It's trumps to personal vanity, though I doubt that Harlow plays his cards that way. The knack is given to few.

Yet athletic men are notoriously careless on names.

I recall the system used by the late Miller Huggins when Yankee manager. Even with his limited squad in spring training "Hug" seldom associated new names and faces.

He would walk up behind a lad, and say sharply, "Hannigan!" And if the athlete continued heedless, "Hug" would muse, "Well, I guess that isn't Hannigan."

Wrestling Shapes and Sizes

DUE TO HIS PERFECTLY proportioned lumps, swells and hollows, Dan O'Mahoney, the Irish Atlas who twizzles Rudy Dusek for God, for country and for Paul Bowser tomorrow, does not look his 217 pounds.

Lacking the pudgy stomach, the gorilla breadth and tree stump legs of the familiar wrestling type, he looks like a new boarder in a boys' school.

Advantage is all on the side of the swart, stocky wrestlers, like Londos and the Duseks, who can get under and around the lean, tall and limber men.

And thick, stumpy legs and arms are harder to wind into braids and pastry twists than the long, noodle sort.

Yet, for all their dramatic pretense of fury, heavyweight wrestlers are slow, lumbering workmen. Which is where O'Mahoney, with his youth, energy and boxing background, may overcome the breed of mushroom men who wallow and waddle like oversized gnomes.

Harooned, or Incorporated Holdout

UNLESS THEIR AFFAIRS are adjusted by the National League, it is hard to see how the Braves are going to dig the price of Southern training out of their living, quivering flesh.

If the Braves cannot fetch up $11,000 to pay the landlord the last quarter's rent, how are they going to discover $40,000 to finance the freightage, hotelage and pasturage of the athletes by the tropic seaside?

There are at present a minority of Braves' players waiting wistfully in St. Pete, hands cupped behind their ears, listening hopefully for some whisper that Judge Fuchs is not going to leave them marooned without even a postcard.

This puts the familiar holdout-shoe on the other foot. For years dissatisfied players have pouted sullenly over salary terms and threatened to desert the game.

But this is the first instance of club owners mutinying against the accepted order and holding out as an incorporated group for personal betterments.

Synnott Gets Run-Around From Can-Am President

IDLE WHILE DOOLEY IMPORTS CANADIANS

By Bill Grimes

At a time when he is badly in need of regular work, Frank Synnott is not receiving assignments from the Canadian-American League . . . Although, like every official, Synnott has made mistakes, he is the peer of any referee in the Can-Am League and deserving of a better break.

James E. Dooley president of the Canadian-American League has been importing referees from Canada . . . He has assigned Jack Cameron and George Mallinson to work games . . . His actions are most inconsistent. He has left, stressing the necessity of getting one overhead who will be able to the eyes of bringing Cameron and Mallinson from Montreal . . .

Red Synnott

There are enough capable officials in these parts to give complete satisfaction in any Can-Am League game, Synnott is one of them . . . Synnott played amateur hockey here for many seasons . . . He had much to do with the popularizing of the game in these parts . . . He is a World War veteran and a member of the American Legion, which organization is liable to step in and sound off on President Dooley and the unfair practice of importing Canadians to fill jobs which Americans—such as Synnott—are capable of handling.

In the event that the U. S. Department of Labor is brought into this refereeing business the N. H. L. will be up against a barrier, for Bill Stewart is the only citizen of the United States on Frank Calder's roster . . . And, should the American Legion enter the controversy it will go deeper into hockey conditions than the referee question . . .

The 1936 Olympic games are responsible for the revival of interest in amateur hockey throughout the country . . . All of the "simon pures" look with favor upon a trip to Germany next winter, and there will be a merry battle for the honor of representing the U. S. . . . As usual, Canada will be represented by the winner of the 1935 Allan Cup, which the Moncton Hawks have held for two years . . .

If the Hawks repeat, all Americans who are not affiliated with out and out pro hockey should be declared eligible.

Jimmy Keating and Al Ahearn, of the South Shore C. C., are packing up for a trip to Florida . . . Eddie Froelich, the Blackhawks trainer, would quit hockey for a major league baseball berth . . .

Max Bishop has informed Eddie Collins that he is almost at playing weight due to regular workouts since he underwent that physical examination at the end of the season . . . Max was pretty overweight when he reported at Sarasota last spring and weakened himself by getting into condition to such a extent that he was almost a skeleton at midseason.

FATE of Tribe IN STORE

LEAGUE HEADS CONVENE

TEAM LIKELY TO RETURN TO TEPEE

By Joe Cashman

Early arrivals among the National League magnates in New York for tomorrow's extraordinary session to discuss the Boston situation are as loath as Braves' officials to talk about the tangle for publication.

Off the record, though, they could be more sympathetic toward the Tribal bosses.

Most of them have or have had grave financial problems of their own, but all have saved their baseball homes. They opine the local management should have found some way to do likewise.

They are most curious to know if the Boston owners applied to the league for a loan to meet the rent due at Braves Field and keep the lease in force.

KENNEL CLUB

Maybe this was done. If it wasn't, and no satisfactory explanation for the failure is offered, they aren't likely to inconvenience themselves more than is absolutely necessary to solve the Braves' problems.

They're also reported to have come to the conclusion that Tom Yawkey, Red Sox owner, meant the "NO" he gave in answer to the Braves request to play their home games at Fenway Park.

This is taken to indicate that they'll direct their efforts toward getting the Warriors back in the Tepee.

Success along that line wouldn't be impossible by any means.

It's said that the trustees of the park haven't yet drawn up a lease for the Boston Kennel Club.

If that's so, they might easily be persuaded to take the ball club back as a tenant.

And should the Kennel Club have be sure of the lease, it might be talked into sub-leasing the plant and building a dog track elsewhere.

CONTRACTS

Judge Emil Fuchs, president of the Braves, and Vice-President Charles F. Adams leave for New York today to be on hand to hear what plans their fellow magnates have for them.

Whether arriving at a solution will take the senior circuit fathers a few hours or several days only time will tell.

Something definite must be decided on in the near future, however. For there's the very important matter of contracts to be sent out.

Any player who has not received a contract by Feb. 15 automatically becomes a free agent.

If the Braves failed to receive theirs by that time, the Boston franchise would be without performers as well as minus a park.

Of course, this matter may already have been taken care of, but it's unlikely providing the directors have been entertaining hopes of selling their holdings.

It's usually much easier to find a buyer if the way has been left open for him to make his own financial arrangements with the players.

The writer's personal opinion is that the final decision will be reached before the end of the week.

Danno O'Mahoney put in a session at tossing the weight at Harvard in preparation for Rudy Dusek at the Garden tomorrow night. O'Mahoney surprised Harvard onlookers with the ease with which he threw the 56-pound weight. Here he is tossing it with feet to spare over the 14-foot bar. Harvard weight throwers are considered excellent if they can throw the 35-pound shot that height. "I'll toss Rudy that distance tomorrow," Danno promises.

Dusek Ready to Box or Wrestle Danno

Rudy Dusek, Nebraska cave-man wrestler, will today end his strenuous training at a local gym for his finish mat bout with Dan O'Mahoney, Irish heavyweight champion, at a Paul Bowser show at the Garden tomorrow night.

Dusek says he is prepared to either fight or wrestle O'Mahoney

"Either style suits me," said the veteran member of the Dusek family.

Rudy said he is 34 years old, and that he can lick his brothers, Ernie, Emil an' Joe at wrestling.

"Ernie is the best wrestler of the other three," said Rudy. "I taught him the game thoroughly. I insist that my brothers keep in condition. That is 60 per cent of the battle.

"I have another brother who was a sissy and went in for boxing. I often let him fight and I used wrestling holds, and I always beat him. A wrestler will lick a fighter in a mixed contest every time."

The preliminary card is the best of the year, with Dick Shikat, German strong man, meeting Al Sparks in the semifinal.

Harlow Aides Named Then

The complete lineup of Harvard's football coaching staff will be announced at a dinner to be tendered Dick Harlow, the Crimson's Western Maryland importation, at the Harvard Club of Boston, on Monday night, February 4.

Since the dinner will mark the first formal appearance of the new coach before the Harvard alumni body, the Harlow dinner will be open only to member of the Harvard Club, who may invite as their guests other Harvard men, graduate or undergraduates, who are non-members of the Boston club.

N. Y. SOLONS TO GIVE CROWN TO WINNER

By Sam Cohen

Sammy Fuller, North End will meet Lou Ambers of Herkimer, N. Y., in a 15 round bout for the world's lightweight championship at the New York Garden on March 1 it was learned by the Boston Evening American.

Barney Ross, Chicago, present holder of the crown, will be stripped of all recognition as champion of the world by the N. Y. Boxing Commission and an announcement to the effect will be forthcoming from Gotham tomorrow.

The Fuller-Ambers bout will be at the championship weight limit, 135 pounds. Articles for the match were signed with Matchmaker Jimmy Johnston of the Garden in New York yesterday.

Ambers has been named by the New York commission as the outstanding contender for the crown as the result of his recent victory over Harry Dublinsky, while Fuller was named by the Chicago commission as number 1 challenger for Ross' crown.

Dan Carroll, manager of Fuller, has already posted $2500 with the Massachusetts and Illinois commissions to force Ross into a title match, but it has been revealed that Ross can no longer make the lightweight limit of 135 pounds.

It is for this reason more than anything lse, that the New York commission will vacate the lightweight throne.

Ambers is a natural lightweight, having scaled 133 pounds for Dublnsky, and while Fuller has not made 135 pounds for sometime, the North End Italian is confident he will have no trouble in getting down.

Fuller will leave immediately for a camp in Maine to start training for this battle. Jimmy Johnston said yesterday that the match will sellout the Garden and the house will be scaled to go over $50,000. Fuller will receive the lion's share of the purse, from 25 to 27½ per cent.

LOU SIGNS FOR 3 COAST FIGHTS

Lou Brouillard, former world's welterweight and middleweight champion, today signed for three bouts. He will battle Oscar Rankin of California in a ten-round tussle at Los Angeles on Jan. 29.

Brouillard has also signed to meet Paul Pirrone of Cleveland in a ten-round go in Philadelphia on Feb. 11 and Frank Battaglia in a ten-session affair at Pittsburgh on Feb. 20.

Brouillard will leave for the Coast next Monday, according to Johnny Buckley. Andy Callahan and Honey Mellody will accompany Brouillard to the Coast and will appear on the same card with him.

Denner Wins

Abe Denner stole the show at the B. A. A. amateur boxing tourney, His two-round knockout of Charley Little, in the 126-pound class, was the high light of the 28-bout card.

The summary:

126-Pound Class—Abe Denner, Boston, knocked out Charles Little, Roxbury, two rounds.

135-Pound Class—A. J. Capparell, Roxbury, beat Henry Gruppi, Framingham, decision.

147-Pound Class—Frank Welch, South Boston, beat Vincent Nolen, Roxbury, decision.

160-Pound Class—Everett Ferranti, Spencer, won from Henry Marsetta, Milford, by default.

MALONEY IN PINK

Jim to Fight Baer Next Thursday

Weighs 218

SAYS HE WILL MAKE MAX STEP

By Dave Wilson

Miami, Fla., Jan. 17—When Jim Maloney hung up his gloves forever a little more than a year ago, he didn't really mean it.

No indeed! South Boston's Shamus had a large portion of his tongue in his good right cheek when he informed the world in general that he was through.

Even up to a few weeks ago, Jim was convinced that he meant it when he said boxing could go its way and he could go his.

Then came Baer; the Hoffman and the Florida and Miami civic pride which is being instilled in Jim by his superiors, in the police department.

SHORT CUT

The combination was too much Jim's decision, like a week-old New Year's resolution, took a tailspin into the ashcan

Jim has been in the game long enough to know the way of the comebacker is hard. And that it must progress by easy stages from the bottom to the top

But he also figures that if a few short cuts are offered, why not come back with a bang to fight the champion? And that's just what he's going to do, as most of the world knows by now, next Tuesday

And to watch him train, it's easy to see that the Maloney tongue was well into the cheek when he delivered his valedictory a short time ago.

Of course the coming fight is not for the title. But Jim sees it as a great shot at the limelight.

A creditable showing might bring him some handsome opportunities, and who is Mr. Maloney to cast aside handsome opportunities?

So he is at the grind daily, preparing for his comeback and challenging tradition which says they never come back—except for more

ONLY 31

Jim said he would need two weeks of stiff training to get in shape for the bout. Up until last Thursday he took daily workouts in the gym he has rigged up in his home.

But Thursday he moved right in to the Y. M. C. A. gym and has been going through some stiff sessions every day.

During the grind he has been relieved from his duties on the Miami police force, where, incidentally, he was getting plenty of road work

Jim, who is 31, scales about 218 pounds at present, and figures he will be down to his old fighting weight or a bit above it when he enters the ring with Max.

He looks in the pink of condition and promises to give a good account of himself with the champ

DAVE WILSON JIM MALONEY

Dave Wilson found Officer Maloney directing traffic at one of the busy corners of Miami, and Dave immediately interviewed the one-time Boston pride, using a racing program for his jottings. Maloney looks fit. Since the picture was taken he has obtained a leave from the Miami police Department to train for an exhibition against Max Baer the latter part of the month.

IF IT ISN'T JOIMES HIMSELF

Mr. Boston

Danno Tosses Weight

By Jack Conway

HARVARD'S great weight throwing stars and Jaakko J. Mikkola, Eddie Farrell's track and field aide, are still gasping after having witnessed the marvelous exhibition of weight throwing by Dan O'Mahoney, Irish heavyweight wrestling champion, who clashes with Rudy Dusek at the Garden tomorrow night.

O'Mahoney visited Harvard upon the invitation of Bill Bingham, director of athletics, Farrell and Frankie Ryan director of publicity Harvard was anxious that its weight men have an opportunity to see the Irish champion in action while throwing the 56-pound weight.

It was necessary for O'Mahoney to bring his own weight to Harvard, as in American college competition the 35-pound weight is the heaviest one used.

Mr. Boston

Decked out in a Harvard track uniform, O'Mahoney gave his exhibition in one of the Crimson cages at Soldiers Field.

The star was set at 14 feet. Without any warm up, Dan picked up the 56-pound weight and cleared the bar by fully a foot. He was within inches of the world's record.

Mikkola tried his hand at throwing the 56-pound weight, and was satisfied when he made a height of ten feet. The huge weight was too much for any of the Harvard athletes.

* * *

LIKES TURF

O Mahoney preferred tossing the weight while standing on the turf rather than on the wooden stand used at Harvard.

"In Ireland we throw the weight while standing on turf or grass" said Dan.

Dan asked for a little competition from the Harvard stars. It was suggested he use a 35-pound weight. The giant picked up the smaller weight.

"It is too light," said O'Mahoney good naturedly. "But I'll try it."

The weight went flying through space and crashed against the wall at the opposite side of the cage. It had covered a distance of 57 feet.

Nobody came within 20 feet of Dan's mark.

"He is a handsome lad and as strong a man as I have ever seen," said Coach Mikkola.

"How would you like Dan on your team?" queried Paul Bowser.

"He would win all the intercollegiate weight throwing titles," replied Mikkola with a smile.

O'Mahoney went back to throwing the 56-pound weight.

"Imagine the weight is Rudy Dusek," said Freddy Moran.

"Then I'll throw it for distance," replied O'Mahoney.

He threw the weight for a distance of 27 feet, and was once more only inches from the world's record.

Dan tossed the big weight six times over a bar set at 14 feet so that a camera could get pictures of the style he could get plenty of good shots. Not once did he even tick the bar.

"I can throw this weight for a height of 16 feet," said Dan. "That's the world record."

* * *

$75,000 MACHINE

O MAHONEY later was ushered through the Field House at Soldiers Field. He was shown the new $75,000 X-ray machine.

It is possible to look into this machine and see with your own eyes what is the extent of an injury suffered by an athlete.

It is not necessary to take any pictures. The eye of the doctor sees what is the trouble.

The Irish champion was impressed by the marvelous health equipment at the Field House. There is a modern hospital in the building. It has the equipment for a major operation.

Harvard athletes are checked by doctors. Each has a card in an index system, and everything about his condition is written down.

If an athlete is suffering from an injury, he is not permitted to practice or compete.

The health of the boys is placed ahead of possible victories.

O Mahoney got his first glimpse of the Harvard Stadium. He said he hoped to attend the Harvard-Yale football game next Fall.

Then back to Boston to train for his finish bout with Rudy Dusek at the Garden tomorrow night.

Escape

Fans Mob Laditzi

A daring escape from an enraged mob by Rudy Laditzi was one of the highlights of Alex MacLean's wrestling show at the Arena. Laditzi got the crowd on him when he kicked Jim Kendricks out of the ring at the finish of their bout.

More than 100 irate customers gathered around the ring, and Laditzi's health was in danger, with the police unable to handle the crowd storming the ringside.

Laditzi leaped over the heads of the threate'ne throng, from the ring, and ran down the aisle to safety in his dressing room.

McCOY KEEPS TITLE

Defeats Mercier in Arena Go

By PAUL WHELTON

In less than 35 minutes of wrestling, Bob "Bibber" McCoy, the Cambridge milk and cream man, staved off an assault against his New England heavyweight title at Alex McLean's weekly mat show in the Boston Arena.

McCoy was a bit too strenuous for the former title holder, Al Mercier, for the best that the Springfield realtor could do was win the second and odd fall

It was a rough match all the way through, with McCoy taking the lead in the rugged department and Mercier reluctant to chivvy his art through use of his fists in retaliation.

He would have fared better, perhaps, than he did—if he did.

McCoy took the first fall in 17 minutes 5 seconds with a flying tackle. Mercier registered the second in 8 minutes 33 seconds when he booted McCoy to the chops as Bibber came through with a back flip at the start of a tackle.

The third went to McCoy when Mercier, lamed by McCoy's twisting an ankle on the ropes, was trapped with a go-behind toe-hold and surrendered in 8 minutes 47 seconds.

Stealing the show, however, was the exhibition by Farmer George McLeod, gentleman of the old school, who gave Bob Russell, the Newport badman, considerable of a wrestling lesson and had the crowd on its feet through most of the bout because of McLeod clever-ness.

The bout went to a 30-minute draw, but it was the Farmer a tussle all the way, even to his turning the tables on Russell and clamping on twice the favorite Russell tangle—a Japanese leg-lock.

George Linnehan and Carl Morgan, draw in 10 minutes; Jim Wallis won out over Farmer Raymond in 7.44 with an arm pull and body press; Archie Campbell downed George Ryerson in 11·30 with a double wrist-lock and arm pull; Art Le Grand flattened Gene Ledoux in 13 48 with an arm pull and body press; the Red Demon beat Andy Brown in 12·45 with a toe hold, and Rudy Laditzi won out over Jim Kendricks in 16 46 with a lift and slam.

RANGER Star Made OF IRON

BORN LUCKY

HAS PLAYED IN 499 CONSECUTIVE GAMES

By Associated Press

New York, Jan. 17—Murray Murdoch, major league hockey's "iron man"—with 499 consecutive games behind him—attributed his unbroken string of competition today to luck and, specifically, to the fact that he was from Lucknow, Ontario.

"Why shouldn't I be lucky after having been born in a town with a name like Lucknow?" asked the veteran New York Ranger forward, playing his ninth season with the blue-shirted puck chasers.

When he was a stripling of 21 years, after he had been graduated from the University of Manitoba, where he specialized in mathematics Murdoch joined the Rangers at the same time as the Cook brothers Fra a Boucher and Lester Johnson. He appeared in every league playoff and exhibition game getting by with no serious injur...

Sturdy Legs

"I've been blessed with a sturdy pair of legs," smiled Murdoch. "I've never so much as had a sprained ankle or had a charley-horse during a season. I was badly hurt once, in the final game of my first season when I collided with Frank Fredericks on of Boston. I was crushed my shoulder badly and was laid up for three weeks, but the season was over.

"Another reason for my record is that during my first couple of seasons with the rinks my job didn't call for sorties into the vicinity of the enemy's goal. I've always been in the second line and my job then was to try and protect the lead set up by the Cooks and Boucher, who were almost sure bets to score.

"It's a little different today, we have three lines and with our veteran trio aging a bit we all have to take a crack at scoring"

Hockey's "iron man" doesn't participate in the ... during the ... Murdoch and their young daughter he lives in Flushing L. I., and in the summer he works in the actuarial department of a large insurance concern.

SOME POMP, a winner over good ones at Arlington Park last summer, comes up to this on razor edge. QUEL JEU placed to Larranga at Tropical Park. HOPE TO DO may be under rated

CHASTITY, SOME KNIGHT, REBEL YELL

FIFTH RACE—$1000, claiming, four-year-olds and up, one and one-eighth miles.

3	Some Knight	111	Meade	3-1
1	Rebel Yell	111	R. Resnick	4-1
11	Geneva Parch	105	Litzenberger	4-1
2	Noble Pride	113	Gilbert	5-1
6	Major General	108	Merritt	10-1

10	Chrysmute	101	G. Watson	15-1
11	Star Fire	102	Porter	15-1
12	Charities	110	Snyder	20-1

CHASTITY drubbed the fleet Earl Porter when he placed to Stand Pat at the other town a few days back. SOME KNIGHT is highly fancied by the Clocker. Rebel Yell is a long shot possibility.

HARDWARE, SEAWICK, POCKET

SIXTH RACE—$1000, claiming, three-year-olds one mile.

3	Hardware	111	Haines	3-1
9	Seawick	103	Merritt	3-1
5	Pocket	106	Wright	3-1
6	Mastiff	110	G. Watson	5-1

1	Pawns	108	Mansfield	15-1
2	Newell	106	Litzenberger	15-1
11	Rare Craft	111	Arcaro	15-1

HARDWARE figures to stand a world of beating in an affair of this sort. Contention, if any, will be furnished by SEAWICK. POCKET turned in several corking efforts in Maryland.

FREE, NOBLE SPIRIT, FLAMING LIGHT

SEVENTH RACE—$800, claiming, four-year-olds and up, one and one-eighth miles.

2	Free	109	Dupre	2-1
1	Noble Spirit	107	Pelletier	4-1
8	Flaming Light	107	Parvin	4-1
10	Christopher	114	S. Renick	8-1
3	Marcatte	109	Merritt	8-1
4	Repressentative	114	Corbett	10-1
5	Infidel	106	Lynch	15-1
9	Briar	108	Pinelli	15-1
6	Happy Hopes	113	G. Watson	15-1
10	Meeting Place	107	Rosen	15-1
11	Blondino	107	Fallon	15-1

FREE appears to stand out in the light. NOBLE SPIRIT, a slow breaker, should be along in time to save the place from FLAMING LIGHT. The latter will likely be on the front end as far as he goes.

CORUM, RUNYON AGREE ON BAER

Can Whip Any Heavy With Eyes Shut, They Say

By Damon Runyon

(Copyright, 1935, By Universal Service)

Flemington, N. J., Jan. 17—Major Will Corum is here with news from the sports battle front.

The major who is one of our foremost sport columnists, says all the lads back on Broadway are trying to think of some way of getting to Miami to see the big fistic production there on the 24th of this month. The major is doing some thinking on the subject himself.

This writer has been giving plenty of thought to the same matter between experts over at the courthouse.

He hears rumors of warm weather on Miami shore, while over here the weather is colder than a prosecuting attorney's heart.

It would be very nice sitting in a front row the night of the 24th underneath that Florida moon.

Major Corum says the boys along Broadway are speaking highly of the Miami show, which features the two big Bears, Max and Buddy, as well as Barney Ross and Frankie Klick, and some other fistic headliners.

It is the first show in a long time that has two champions of the world on the same card.

MALONEY

Major Corum saw the heavyweight champion just before leaving New York, and says that Max is in marvelous condition, and is looking more color than ever. The major and this writer disagree on some points, at this moment the Santa Anita handicap, but not on Max Baer.

"We both think he is one of the greatest champions the fistic game has produced in many years, and that it will be a long time before they dig up a man to beat him

"Max can beat any heavyweight around right now with his eyes shut."

Miami will be seeing him this month at the peak of his pugilistic glory.

He is to meet none other than Officer Edward James Maloney formerly of Boston, in a four-round affair, which alone ought to be worth the price of admission, as Edward James is a fellow who used to be able to pop pretty good, and may take his old-time Sunday trip at Barney Ross and back.

Edward James is now a traffic bull in Miami, and behind is one of the most picturesque careers the glove game ever produced.

He made about as much money at boxing as any one champion of the past 20 years, because he always had that thing called color.

KILLING GAME

Besides a great heavyweight champion of the south, Miami will be seeing a lightweight champion who is certain to pass into pugilistic history as one of the all-time greats.

Barney Ross' place is already established by his feat of winning two titles and hooding both at the same time, the lightweight title and the welterweight, though he afterward lost the welterweight title back to the man from whom he took it.

The New York boxing commission has suspended Ross for taking the Miami date; also his opponent, Frankie Klick, and Ross' stands suspended until he fights a boy named Lou Ambers, a busy little man with a style something on the order of Memphis Pal Moore of another era.

Like Moore Ambers cannot punch a lick, and he does not strike the writer as being ready for Ross as yet despite the ruling of the New York commission.

This ruling, of course, is foolish. It is of a piece with the kind of business that had contributed so much to the ruin of boxing all over the land, and which is likely to wind up in the repeal of boxing laws in many states, including New York.

CUBS FACE EAGLES

Although they are leading the league by four points, while their adversaries are deadlocked in fourth position, Bruin Cubs cannot afford to underrate the New Haven Eagles, when they clash tonight at the Arena, in a Canadian-American League game.

The Cubs are at the peak of their form. They have been walking through opponents at will, since they were set back by the Eagles in New Haven.

With the exception of Bob Bester, they are in shape for tonight's encounter and bubbling over with confidence since they tripped over the Reds 5 to 1 in Providence.

Cubs and Eagles have played four games this season, and all that the Hitchmen have received from their efforts is three points.

Reasoning that the Eagles are even stronger than when they beat his charges 10 days ago in New Haven, Manager Hitchman will start his best line, Bob McCully, Frank Jerwa and Red Jackson, and will have Joe Jerwa and Jean Baptiste Pusie on the back line protecting Percy Jackson.

Ora Heximer, who played here with the Cubs and Bruins, will make his first appearance at the Arena tonight in a New Haven uniform. Heximer has been the sensation of the Can-Am League since he returned to his old manager, Frank Carroll.

Hrx has scored at least once in all but two games for New Haven and has been skimming cleverly with Lloyd Jackson.

Penn vs. Brown

Philadelphia, Jan. 17—University of Pennsylvania will meet the Brown University football team on Oct. 24, 1936, at Franklin Field, renewing gridiron relations for the first time since 1927.

The playing agreement, the announcement said, is for one season only. Brown is the fifth Penn opponent carded for the 1936 season

BRAN MUFFIN WINS BIG RACE

By Maurice Bernard

Universal Service Staff Correspondent

Santa Anita Park, Arcadia, Cal., Jan. 17—The form players went home with another case of red neck after the long shots came romping home in almost every race on the mid-week card.

When Bran Muffin won the sixth and feature race on the program, it was the climax of an unusual day of racing that saw four long shots score before Jovius, an equal choice with Rego, bounced down in the fifth number.

How would you like to parlay two bucks on a few winners such as these

Blind Blarney	$20.60
Justice Logan	11.60
Pinkie	50.00
Sun Caprice	14.60
Jovius	5.60
Bran Muffin	18.00
Storm	5.80

Every time the numbers went up, a yell was registered by the long shot backers When Bran Muffin scored, the yell was extra loud.

Bran Muffin led for the entire mile to snatch her second victory, winning by a length and a half from Joe Flores, with Mumale getting the shot.

R. I. Opposed to Proposed Claim Rule

By Associated Press

Miami, Fla., Jan. 17—The first snag in the path of unanimous action came today as the National Association of State Racing Commissioners considered the merits and demerits of open and closed claiming.

While only scattered comment came from the executive sessions before the open meeting to consider th proposed uniform code of racing rules. It was indicated Rhode Island's commissioners opposed the modified open claiming rule.

As proposed by Chairman William H Cane of New Jersey, the ... ded ... tion set at ... limit ... ness of any ... which a premium of 25 per cent of the claiming price would be awarded on for entering the horse in another claiming race.

It was considered not unlikely New Hampshire and Massachusetts would decline to agree to modified open claiming in order to preserve freedom of action

The open claiming rule, the Rhode Islanders maintain, offers too much opportunity for persons to claim horses in one state for transfer to a track in another state of prime importance in the New England area.

Radio Feature Tonight

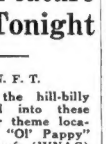
By N. F. T.

Out of the hill-billy region and into these thicket for theme location comes "Ol' Pappy" Walter O'Keefe (WNAC) tonight.

What's more, he brings an original drama burlesque labeled "Hiss Me Again" for his 9 to 9:30 network nonsense.

In between loud speaker hisses and boos, some songs by Annette Hanshaw and current melody manifestations by the Dan Lonis music men, under Glen Gray direction, will be wafted.

This chap O'Keefe is on the non-stop rise in the radio comedian chain gang ranks, make no mistake. He has always been a top-notch broadcaster, ever since the days when he mastered ceremonies for that first big cigarette cantata that switched from city to city and back to New York with the well remembered "Okay, O'Keefe" cry.



Sophie Tucker

Then there came his inimitable "Man on the Flying Trapeze" interpretation —how that caught on! Verily, it won the sincerest form of flattery for him, meaning far and wide impersonation. Getting down to cases, his most recent "high" foolishness and hilarious "hill-billy" business, stamps him as strikingly versatile. Judging from advance word in hand this morning, tonight's O'Keefe offering should prove to be what we clever Americans call a Wow!

SOPHIE THE STAR

Rudy regales his variety hour (WEEI) from 8 to 9 this evening, with the shouting song stylist, Sophie Tucker, the stage personalities, Constance Cummings and Nicholas Hannen, giving an adaptation of "Ascent on Youth" in one act play form, and Peg La Gentra, latest of the sound cancun "finds," among the soloing sweeties.

* * *

Helen Jepson makes her farewell "mike" appearance for Paul Whiteman tonight (WEEI) when his "Music Hall" setting kicks off from 10 to 11 o'clock. Miss Jepson is making ready for her return to Metropolitan Opera spotlights, as of January 3.

Radio Questions, Answers

Q—Who is the "Musical Rhymster" heard through WNAC, and is it the same fellow who makes up verses through the WEEI waves?

Poetic Patron of Neponset.

A—You refer to Carl Moore in the first question. Deane Moore does something similar for WEEI. Carl Moore also accompanies Alice O'Leary in all of her radio and stage appearances.

Q—Does the voice of President Roosevelt have that "way" over everything when he has a coast to coast message?

K. F. D., of Walpole.

A—Usually the President's secretary makes known a proposed broadcast by the Chief Executive some weeks in advance. Thus the time schedules are accordingly arranged. Often it is necessary to shift programs. In an emergency, the President would command first consideration of course.

Q—What is the age and nationality of Jos Penner?

J. H. S., of East Boston.

A—Joe is Hungarian and 31 years old.

Q—Can you tell us the name of the song played during the "American Album of Familiar Music" program?

Fascinated, of Concord.

A—It is a selection called "Dream Serenade."

Q—How about Charles Winninger as "Capt. Henry" on the "Show Boat" broadcast? Do you know if he is coming back?

Waiting, of Somerville.

A—It doesn't seem likely. He left the program some months ago when the show he joined did not prove successful to the degree he had hoped.

Q—Who was the new announcer the Andre Kostelanetz concert hall hour had last Saturday night January 12?

C. A. F., of Brighton.

A—He is John McGain, who likewise writes a newspaper column in New York.

EDITORS NOTE: Very often readers will find the answer to their question given as the answer to the query of another reader. In other words, the item about "Capt. Henry" as published today, replies to a score or more readers who have asked the identical question. Send yours to the Radio Editor and watch this space for the information you seek.

Petting Blamed On Repeal

By Universal Service

Washington, Jan. 17— Public petting parties by drunken boys and girls to the tunes of "raucous orchestras" in roadhouses are the result of 13 months of repeal, Senator Sheppard (D.) of Texas, told the Senate.

Sheppard, author of the now defunct Eighteenth Amendment, reading reports from unnamed states added:

"Minors find it easy to buy drinks and consume them on the premises until they reach such a state of intoxication they are unable to reach their cars without assistance."

Declaring 13 months of repeal had proved necessity for return of prohibition, Sheppard added these horrors:

There are more wide open saloons in the country today than ever before.

Liquor-auto fatalities on the highways are 72 per cent of the total American deaths in 1934.

Bootlegging has returned in full force.

SPRAGUE

Sees No

CAUSE FOR Alarm

By HUGH E. BRADSHAW

Professor O. M. W. Sprague sees no cause for alarm in the gold clause case. In a letter to Merrill Griswold, chairman of the Massachusetts Investors Trust, he sees a simultaneous government announcement in the event of an adverse decision.

"This would be calculated to allay investors' fears and prevent the chaos predicted in some quarters. It would undoubtedly call for emergency legislation by Congress and the several states providing the necessary constitutional reforms to make the gold acts workable. Because Professor Sprague furnishes such expert support for ideas expressed here we reprint below a paragraph from his statement.

O. M. W. Sprague

• • •

In concluding his letter to Mr. Griswold, Professor Sprague says:

"It seems to me unwarranted that the government, as a result of an adverse decision, should reduce the price of gold from the present level of $35 an ounce to the old level of $20.67 as this would involve a reversal of one of its most cherished policies. The future course of business will be subject to many uncertainties, but I can see no reason whatever why any one should sacrifice either securities or commodities on account of the pending decision."

• • •

Notebook: Particularly interesting to us are the comments on selling securities and commodities because of fear . . . . The reference to the most cherished policies is pleasing, since such a day or two ago that it was the heart of the New Deal . . . . While on gold an interesting story is going the rounds . . . . Concerning prominent legal authorities in Washington, who say the gold clause agreements will be ordered for foreign, but not domestic, bondholders . . . . And while all this excitement is going on good reports that strong financial opinion is moving for stabilization are lost.

• • •

The natural thing to do, especially when selling ideas have been frowned on, is to run for cover as soon the low. Frankness, however, requires us to admit this is large, but the market has literally had a nervous breakdown. It is hard to calculate with any degree of safety how close it is recovering its composure. We are going to fall back on the old rule that from 2 to 5 sessions are required to create a good rally base. This counts Tuesday and Wednesday as the first two. . . .

• • •

Briefs: Metal and mining shares are showing a willingness to climb back . . . . Once started they should snap back almost as fast as they fell off . . . . The big market difficulty is uncertainty . . . . Until something definite is known one cannot ask for too much . . . . The poor rails took a horrible lacing. With their funded debt, competition and rate problems they were unanswerable for argument . . . . Utilities were so low nothing much mattered.

• • •

Among favored shares we find Celanese, Belding, Hemingway and Industrial Rayon. Bulls simply will not down on the rayon shares. They see good volume business for earnings at profit levels. Of all the textile groups it certainly seems this one is best off from a cost and profit standpoint. Woolens are fairly well off, while cottons are operating under favorable prices in certain directions only. We are inclined to agree the artificial silk stocks are the textiles to own.

40 LASHES For Wife Beating

Augusta, Me., Jan. 17—Forty lashes across the back or a year's imprisonment would be the penalty for wife beating in Maine under a bill ready for introduction in the Maine Legislature.

The bill, sponsored by Representative Clarence E. Sawyer of Brunswick, provided that if the court ordered a whipping for a convicted wife beater instead of jail, the lashes should be administered by a sheriff.

BRONCHITIS
Mrs. Georgiana Branch, 197 Brookline st., Cambridge, Mass., says: "I suffered from bronchitis. It was so severe I thought I was going to die. There was a tightness of the chest with painful pressure. I had a terrible cold and a hard cough. Mrs. Inez Layne told me that Dr. Walsh had done so much for her that she felt sure Dr. Walsh could help me. I did. Dr. Walsh treat me and I am so overjoyed at the results of Dr. Walsh's treatment in my case that I have sent him a number of patients and I feel that it is the hope that others who suffer as I did may know where to go for help."

GENERAL GEORGE WASHINGTON TO C. C. PINCKNEY

JULY 8, 1796.

"It is a fact too notorious to be denied, that the greatest embarrassments under which the administration of this Government labors, proceed from the counteraction of people among ourselves, who are more disposed to promote the views of another nation than to establish national character of their own."

Government Must Foster Hiring by Industries

THE tendency of politicians during the depression to scold business men does not change the basic fact that Government in the nature of things feeds on the fruits of productive enterprise.

Needing to be relieved from caring for an abnormal number of unemployed, the Government must foster an expansion in job-giving private industry.

Talk of co-operation is cheap, but the real test of the sincerity will come with the new tax policy of the Administration.

Recovery has already been needlessly delayed because muddle-headed Congressmen more than two years ago blocked scientific Federal tax reform, raising the demagogic battle-cry of "soak the rich"!

FROM a pragmatic standpoint, soaking the thrifty is an unsatisfactory plan because you cannot indefinitely continue such a policy.

Eventually the taxpayer becomes ruined.

The idea was recently clearly expounded by the American Taxpayers' League, which said:

"Confiscatory taxes in whatever form levied are non-recurring and at best an expediency.

"During the devouring process they may temporarily fatten Government, but the bones of industry afford no sustenance for defaulting Governments or unemployed people.

"As a permanent or temporary source of revenue confiscatory levies should be eliminated from consideration in any revenue system. They are always a weapon of destruction.

"No productive industry, whether farm, factory or intermediate agency between the producer and consumer, can absorb any additional taxes.

"The tax must be so laid that it passes its full weight on to the ultimate consumer with minimum cost of collection."

The President could hearten business men and investors by taking leadership in sound tax reform.

If he will seize this opportunity the backbone of the lagging depression will have definitely been broken.

Saving Waterfowl

Move Is Needed

Announcement of a movement to have President Roosevelt declare a ban on waterfowl hunting for one year was made recently in Boston.

Bird lovers gathered at the University Club backed a plan to have the ban start next September.

The lines of Bryant, Bay State poet, "To a Waterfowl," would take on a prophetic ring if the ban were imposed. They read:

"Vainly the fowler's eye
Might mark thy distant flight to do thee wrong,
As, darkly painted on the crimson sky,
Thy figure floats along."

Draining and drying of the breeding grounds of waterfowl has sadly reduced their numbers.

The proposed ban is a conservation measure deserving of support.

The Mail Is Delivered

Despite the Flood

Uncle Sam's rural free delivery, although not very old, already has its traditions.

One of these is that whatever happens the mail must be delivered.

John M. Morgan, R. F. D. carrier in West Pembroke, Me., jogging over his 22-mile route behind Old Dobbin, came to a swollen stream.

The bridge collapsed. Horse and wagon were swept away, but Morgan clung to the mailbag.

Swept downstream, he found refuge in the top of a small tree in the middle of the flooded area.

He stayed there for hours, but the story had a happy ending. The mail was delivered.

Congratulations are due to men like this Morgan, "always faithful." And, boy, page Floyd Gibbons!

Another Imposition

It's On Autoists

Don't blame Attorney-General Warner—he merely interprets the law which says all buyers of alcohol must give their names and addresses.

He finds that "all buyers" include those who get denatured alcohol for their automobiles.

So filling station attendants will hereafter have to keep a record of "alky" buyers.

In these days, when business is trying to eliminate useless motions, the law steps in and adds a few.

Which reminds us we started to suggest abolishing some old "nuisance laws" on Beacon Hill instead of drafting a flood of new ones.

Right to Comment

It Is Wisely Upheld

Freedom of the press and freedom of speech in these days of regimentative experimentation in Washington need all the support they can get.

Hence the decision of the Indiana Supreme Court in a recent case deserves nationwide commendation.

The Court said:

"The right to comment freely, and criticize the action, opinions and judgments of courts is of primary importance to the public generally. Not only is it good for the public but it has a salutary effect on courts and judges as well."

No dissent from that, from us laymen at least.

AS THE TAXPAYER SEES IT

I'M WORKING for bailiffs and sheriffs,
Commissioners, deputies, clerks;
I work to pay taxes and tariffs
To people who give me the works;
The total of taxes
Enormously waxes
Until every bank account cracks,
And it is distressing
To find they're assessing
A tax on the tax on a tax!

I CAN'T afford taxis to ride in
Because of the taxes I pay;
The house that I chance to abide in
Is being taxed slowly away;
My food and my raiment
Are subject to payment
Of revenues, taxes and dues
To pay swollen bounties
For boroughs and counties
And all their political crews!

RED TAPEWORMS in swarms bureaucratic
Feed on my assessments and fees,
Devising new fashions erratic
For adding more taxes to these;
I'm working for spenders
Whose squandering renders
No good that I'm able to see;
I work for inspectors,
Clerks, shirks and collectors—
And nobody's working for ME!

Repair of U. S. Buildings Would Boom Employment

By JAMES T. WILLIAMS, JR.

In his annual address to the Congress President Roosevelt announced "a new program of emergency employment." All public work undertaken under this program, he declared, should be "useful in the sense that it affords permanent improvement in living conditions or that it creates future new wealth for the nation."

President Roosevelt

A golden opportunity is offered to suit the action of the federal government to the word of the President's address and to enable the government to lead the country in the revival of the building industry by the power of federal example rather than by mere federal exhortation.

By modernizing, renovating and repairing all public buildings and installations, North, South and West, now in need of such improvement, the federal government would be setting an excellent example to home owners and other property holders to do likewise.

And all the work of this sort, undertaken by the federal government, would meet the standard of usefulness fixed by the President in his address to the Congress. All such work would afford "permanent improvement in living conditions" for the defenders of the government and for its civil servants. Such work would also create "future new wealth for the nation by conserving and enhancing the value of its own federal property."

Nearly every branch of the federal government has benefited greatly in the last two or three years by new construction undertaken for the primary purpose of relieving unemployment. Many hundreds of millions of dollars have been expended for new federal buildings and public works of various types. Many more millions have been expended for highway construction all over the country.

While this was being done—and much of it needed to be done—Congress has pursued a niggardly policy in failing to provide for the repair of old buildings and installation badly in need of renovation.

As a result of this neglect the value of a great deal of federal property today is rapidly declining. There are many post-office buildings, customs houses, immigration stations, public health service buildings, army posts, naval stations, marine barracks and air fields whose present run-down condition is a public disgrace.

The dilapidated condition of these structures and installations is due to the failure in recent years to provide adequate appropriations for their modernization, repair and upkeep. Money expended for this purpose this year and next would save the country many hundreds of millions of dollars in the future.

The government has many buildings today from one to 100 years old which are well-built and would be serviceable for many years to come if repairs on them were kept up. Work of this sort requires no elaborate planning ahead of time, no top-heavy organization, no extensive overhead and no new federal agency to accomplish.

Work of this sort would immediately give employment to thousands of unemployed all over the country, take them off the relief rolls, rescue them from the bread lines and soup kitchens.

Should Mamas Go In for Mass Production?

All right—all right, have it your own way! Goo and goo and beam like a blooming bonfire if it suits your fancy.

Elsie Robinson

But as for me — though it puts me on the spot with the whole Itty Witty Bitty Clan—I hereby proclaim to the entire cockeyed world that these Childbirth Marathons MAKE ME SICK.

Rosebuds, dimples and Cunnin' Pink Toes notwithstanding, I consider them the most idiotic, uncivilized and generally disgusting phenomena in our generally nutty Status Quo.

SWEEPSTAKES PRIZE

I am, of course, referring to this recent agitation for Bigger n' Better Batches of Babies which is claiming large gobs of news space in Toronto, as you doubtless know, some enterprising citizen has put up a $500.00 sweepstakes prize to be given to the mother who produces the most children between 1926 and 1936.

As we go to press, Mrs. Grace Bagnato is leading the race with a newly born babe—the eleventh since 1926. This number includes three sets of twins.

This advertisement, however, is a mere game of tiddly-winks compared to the Motherhood Mass Production records over in Italy, where Premier Mussolini has recently proclaimed Signora Maria Brasilliani "Italy's Greatest Mother"—due to her enthusiastic non-stop performance of 12 young Brasilliania in 14 years.

All of which has been hailed with rapturous burps and burbles from practically the entire human race—which seems to me but one more proof of our universal asininity.

Now no one appreciates a nice, healthy, happy little baby more than I do. I have had one myself. I am never without three or four tucked away in the household somewhere.

And were I a young woman and given my choice of any career under heaven, with all possible rewards and glories attached thereto, I would still choose to be a mother and never for one second regret the bargain.

MOST USEFUL CITIZEN

Obviously, there's no nobler or more useful citizen than a wise and loving mother—nor one more deserving of every honor. But the simple physiological fact that a female reproduces her kind is no guarantee that she is either wise or kind, or deserving of the slightest respect.

She may be and often is both stupid and malicious—absolutely careless—a domestic blight and a public nuisance. Yet, according to our gaga traditions, if she's a Mama she gets the medals and no questions asked.

As a consequence, no craft has within its ranks such glaring and shameful specimens of inefficiency as the ranks of motherhood. But just say that out loud and see what happens to you!

All of which is pesty enough when Mama merely amasses up two or three young lives. But when she begins to turn them out by the dozen—its entire becomes a major social problem.

No city would dream of permitting an unlicensed factory to turn out unrestricted masses of goods or deadly commodities upon the helpless public.

Yet the most stupid, inept, lazy or mean-minded mother can produce a crop of under-nourished, maladjusted young creatures who are, potentially, as dangerous as any bomb or poison, and we not only view without alarm but we actually hang wreaths upon her.

Text For Today "If a man die, shall he live again? All the days of my appointed time will I wait till my change comes." —Job xiv, 14.

Home 'Beauty Shop'

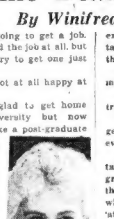
By Winifred Black

Gretchen is going to get a job. She doesn't need the job at all, but she's going to try to get one just the same.

Gretchen is not at all happy at home.

She was so glad to get home from the university but now she'd like to take a post-graduate course or something, not because she's so crazy about the university. She isn't crazy about it at all. But Gretchen thinks it's a lot better than home at that.

I'll let Gretchen tell you about it just the way she told me the other day:



Winifred Black

"I'm going to get a job," said Gretchen, "and I'm going to have a little flat of my own and I'm going to make my own coffee and fry my own bacon and at night I'm going to have comfy little dinners with chops and salad, don't you know. And pretty little embroidered table scarfs and a vase on the table with a rose in it.

"And I'm going to wear pretty pajamas or a gay hostess robe, and I'm going to make myself—a home.

"Oh, yes, I'd like to have a real home with a husband and babies and a dog at the gate and somebody's rubbers in the hall and a little kiddy-car on the sidewalk, but since I can't do that—yet—why, I'll make the home myself, and that's that.

"My mother doesn't live in a home, she lives in a beauty parlor.

"She spends a couple hours a day—keeping young and the rest of the day she's either dieting or exercising or 'reducing' or she's talking to her friends about these things.

"That's all they talk about, mamma and her friends.

"Keeping young and being 'attractive.'

"And they're every one of them getting older and harder faced every minute.

"That's all they think about or talk about. You could bring the greatest genius in the world into the house and all they'd see was whether she was what they call 'attractive' or not.

"And they try each other's rouge and each other's face powder and recommend creams and they never read and they never laugh and mother just hates to have me around because everybody tells her she looks so awfully young.

"And when they see me they know she must be a wee bit along, don't you know, or she couldn't have a great big, strapping woman like me for a daughter. And mother hates it and I sort of hate it, too.

"Brother Bob can't bear it. He and dad are great friends. I don't see how dad stands it, the beauty talk and the reducing gabble and nobody paying the least attention to him or his troubles.

"I want a home and I'm going to make one for myself until some good fellow makes one for me.

"I'm tired of living in a beauty shop and a youth emporium—it's all so sort of pitiful and cheap and foolish, don't you know."

Well, after all, there is something to Gretchen's side of things, isn't there?

I wonder if her mother wouldn't be happier if she'd just rejoice in Gretchen's youth and let herself grow comfortably and peaceably middle aged?

Human Side of the News

Polar Possibilities

By Edwin C. Hill

THE GLOBE TROTTER OF HEARST METROTONE NEWS

SAYS Louis Bernacchi, who was with Scott at the South Pole:

"Within the next fifty years I can well imagine Antarctica as the seat of many sanitariums, as it is a land in which germs cannot live. I can see people who have tuberculosis and similar ailments going there from all parts of the world, and not only being cured, but perhaps living there permanently."

Edwin C. Hill

Skye Russell Owen, who was with Byrd at the South Pole:

"It is certain that explorers will keep pecking away at the Antarctic unknown until there is nothing left to explore, and then perhaps we can go there by airplane for a summer holiday—and I assure you there is no more beautiful place in the world."

These current quotations may give part of the answer to those of us who have been asking: "Why all this flying, fuss and exploration about the South Pole?"

The question, after all, is not an unnatural one.

We know how the persistent Columbus annoyed his Genoese compatriots with his talk about sailing west to India.

Even a fellow as far-seeing as Voltaire could envision Canada as nothing but a frozen morass of acres covered with endless snow.

Getting closer to home, we have the case of Alaska and the records of how our fathers and grandfathers laughed at the "waste" of the few millions of dollars which we paid to Russia for the territory, and how they took to calling it "Seward's Folly."

Today Antarctica is a continent almost unknown, a mountainous mass of ice. Once upon a time, in the pre-glacial era, it was a land of moderate rainfall with vegetation and heavy forests.

Recently Quinn Blackburn, a geologist with the Byrd party, found coal fields, sandstone and fossils only 182 miles from the South Pole. What if Blackburn had found gold? Therein lies the secret of the farthest south.

Are there hidden in its depths mineral precious to man?

Will he in the future find a way to utilize these wastes and make them work for him?

It is difficult to imagine an affirmative answer to these questions, just as difficult as it would have been to say in the year 1835 that within a century man would be flying thousands of miles through the air without a stop and that through the same, wired air man would be hearing voices from the other side of the world.

The possibilities of Antarctica, no matter how remote, are quite a matter of concern to John Bull. He has staked his claim to about three-quarters of the domain, including in his portion that section to which Admiral Byrd has given the name "Little America."

On the eve of Admiral Byrd's first trip in 1928, he was quick to dispatch a note to Washington, letting forth that "in addition to the Ross Dependency and the Falkland Islands Dependency there were certain areas in the Antarctic to which a British title exists."

The United States merely acknowledged receipt of the note, and Byrd continues to give a mild case of the jitters to the imperialists of Downing Street.

A year ago they brought 1,000,000 square miles of the territory under control of Australia by an order-in-council.

Now a three-masted auxiliary schooner with a crew of 14 Englishmen is far out on the ocean, headed for the Bay of Whales to take up the search in Antarctica when Byrd leaves off.

The Prince of Wales is patron of this expedition, and the British government provided $50,000 of the cost.

It is a bit ironical that just at about the time this schooner, the Penola, was weighing anchor at Portsmouth, Admiral Byrd was radio-ing from Little America that he believed he had conclusive evidence that Antarctica was one continent and was not divided by a strait.

The main purpose of this English party was to seek the answer to the very question: "Are there two Antarctica?"
